

Rhyne Accepts Bell Committee Proposals

liberations and decisions. Rhyne said the best way to do this is for the UN "to make constant use of the International Court of Justice, a body which it now largely ignores."

Rhyne told the law students here that what is needed for the world is the same type of unified and adequate court system recommended by the Bell Committee in this state.

This committee's recommendations, if adopted, would be the greatest forward step in the field of improving judicial administration in the history of North Carolina," he said.

The Bell Committee — headed by State Senator J. Spencer Bell of Charlotte — proposed sweeping changes last summer for the state's court system.

The heart of the committee's proposals is recommendation for a unified court system of three divisions, with the supreme court vested with overall authority. These divisions are:

1. Appellate division composed of the supreme court;
2. General trial division, composed of present superior courts;
3. District trial division, which would abolish justice of the peace courts and recorder's and magistrate's courts in the new district court role.

Other, more detailed proposals were also made.

Rhyne said "I wholeheartedly approve of its recommendations. This modernization of the judicial system of North Carolina is long overdue."

The current system can only be corrected "by revitalizing the entire system" with the changes of the group.

He said the "spotlight of national attention is now focused upon North Carolina to see what it does with these very outstanding recommendations."

Here, Rhyne said, is where lawyers fit into the picture — "not just a few lawyers but all the lawyers of North Carolina."

The state's lawyers need to make an "aggressive, firm stand" in support of the proposals.

"The lawyers of North Carolina have a great challenge and a great opportunity to perform a tremendous public service by supporting the Bell Committee's recommendations. I feel certain they will," he said.

In talking about the increasing loss of able young lawyers to better-paying fields, Rhyne reported that a Committee on Law Practice Economics, appointed by the American Bar Assn., studied the causes of the decline of economic status.

"It has now compiled data indicating that the economic plight of lawyers is due largely to our failure to utilize modern methods and procedures, both in our own law offices and in the courts."

"In this jet and atomic age, law business is still conducted too frequently through horse-and-buggy methods."

Cooperative Living Cuts Costs In Co-op

By ANN FRYE

Low expenses is only one attractive feature of a relatively new and unique organization, known as the "International Cooperative Society."

The four members of the co-op society are currently looking for around 10 other men who would be interested in living in their rented house, eating meals and enjoying the companionship of persons of other nationalities.

Residents at the house pay the same rent as is charged by University dormitories. The economy comes with money saved on meals eaten at the house. Members of the co-op society work together cleaning the house and take turns fixing the meals. But this is just one measure of the "cooperative" effort.

Besides the economic aspect, an other reason for the co-op society with United States citizens.

All live together in the co-op house and, through elected officers, is to bring together foreign students control the budget of the entire operation of the house.

The co-op society is not a fraternity-type organization. The main difference between the society and a social fraternity is that anyone interested may become apart of the co-operative society.

The society here was formed nearly four years ago. The plan itself was not novel because similar groups had been operating successfully on other campuses throughout the country.

Since first formed here, the co-op society has had members from India, Formosa, Germany, Hawaii and Japan.

In addition to serving its own members, the society often entertains visitors, such as the Russian students who were here during the summer.

The co-op house is virtually independent of the University administration except that a special advisory board to the society rules on purchases of $300 or more.

To operate effectively, John Hodgkins, acting house manager, said yesterday the society needs at least 10 occupants.

A meeting for interested students will be called sometime soon, Hodgkins said. In the meantime, Hodgkins can be reached at the house on 208 West Franklin. The telephone number of the co-op house is 9-2471.

Watch Out For Passbooks

The athletic office yesterday requested that any students who have found athletic passbooks lost by others be returned to the athletic offices in Woolen Gymnasium or to Mrs. G. E. Shepard, registration officer, Hanes Hall.

It was pointed out that these passbooks are not transferable and can, under no conditions, be used by anyone except their rightful owners. If lost books are not returned, the owners will be deprived of their use and they will be of no value to anyone else.

FOURTH SEASON

WUNC-TV To Start Tomorrow

By JAMIE HOLMES

The fourth season of telecasting via Channel 4 from the campus studios of WUNC-TV begins tomorrow.

This station is one of three educational television stations in the country that operates on maximum allowable power, 100,000 watts. Some programs are also carried by as many as six commercial stations.

Headed by Director Earl Wyan, WUNC-TV broadcasts from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., then resumes telecasting from 6:10 to 10 p.m.

Anyone with a TV set can tune in on these programs as easily as they do on the commercial shows.

Production Manager John Hawes said.

Although some of the work is correlated with Chapel Hill's pioneering Radio, TV and Motion Picture Department, Hawes emphasized the station's primary concern is to serve the campus, area and state in presenting programs of an educational or cultural nature.

WUNC-TV's ace in the hand is its mobile telecasting unit. Through its facilities all Tar Heel football games, as well as many other campus events, are filmed. Every Sunday morning the mobile unit travels to a Chapel Hill or surrounding area church to make a live telecast of the service.

From the local radio and auxiliary units at Woman's College and State College, WUNC-TV produces and telecasts four programs which are viewed daily by North Carolina high school students. At Chapel Hill, two programs in United States History and world history originate, with an official daily watching audience of 10,000 which, Hawes said, doesn't include the hundreds who watch without being officially counted.

By presenting these public service programs, WUNC-TV receives funds from the North Carolina-In School TV Budget, an extension of the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

The University Budget allots the rest of this station's operating funds of around $40,000.

which met several times with the Librarian last year," Orne commented.

"The library is requesting increased funds for books, journals and equipment during the next biennium which should make it better able to meet the needs of the increased number of students who must use it," the Librarian added.
