Ugly Man Deadline Extended

The UMOG deadline has been extended until noon Saturday by Alpha Phi Omega President Randal Etheridge.

"We feel that many dormitories and fraternities could arrange with the Photo Lab for the three prints necessary to enter if we gave them another day," Etheridge said.

Beginning Monday students will be able to vote for the "Ugliest Man on the Campus" in a contest sponsored by Carolina's service fraternity.

Polls will be maintained at the Scuttlebutt, Y-court and the Pine Room each afternoon. Students will vote for their choice after studying the 5 by 7 inch photographs displayed by depositing a penny for every vote they wish to register.

"Several fraternities already have turned in the three photographs of their most hideous examples of the human race," affirmed Etheridge on Tuesday. He went on to explain that any interested group could obtain the necessary photographs of their contestant from the Photo Lab for "about $2.50."

Entries should be brought to the APO office located in the basement of Smith Dorm by Friday afternoon. The winner will be presented a distinctive mahogany plaque bearing his name and honor together with a caricature of the Ugly Man as seen on posters on the campus.

3611 Cast Ballots To Place University Party In Power

Legislature Passes 59-60 Budget In Record Time

By STAN BLACK

The last session of the Twenty-sixth Student Legislature passed the 1959-60 student government budget in record time last night. Only five changes of any importance were made in the recommendations of the Budget Committee, of which Charlie Gray was the chairman. As the budget stands now, there is $123,000 estimated income and $119,931.42 estimated expenses, leaving an unappropriated balance of $3,068.58 for leeway operations by the Student Legislature next year.

Items entirely eliminated from the budget in committee include the University Club, the Exchange Scholarship Program, and the Ram and Ewe. The Carolina Quarterly was cut to two issues a year, and the Graduate Club speaker program, which closely paralleled the work of the Carolina Forum, was completely cut.

The Interdormitory Council's appropriation for social activities was increased by $1100 over last year up to $2300, on the basis of good handling this year. The Graham Memorial and Yack amounts were also raised $1,000 over last year in committee, due to increased operations. Most other recommendations were substantially in line with the prior year's budget.

Acting last night, the Student Legislature did revise the appropriations of several organizations as recommended by Gray's committee. The number of delegates sent to the National Students Association convention was reduced in the interests of economy and efficiency of service.

About $500 in travel money was taken from the Debate Squad and given to the Carolina Forum for an increased program of guest speakers. In order to maintain a respectable unappropriated balance Jim Crowover suggested that the Carolina Symposium figure be reduced by $250, with the understanding that if more was needed, it could be asked for.

The budget was finally passed with the comment that the unappropriated balance this coming year is the smallest in recent years. Student government leaders have noted (See LEGISLATURE, Page 3)

The University Party managed to sweep almost everything in sight as they whipped the Student Party for all offices, save the Student Legislature and one senior class office.

Heaviest winner was Charlie Gray who soundly trounced Norman Smith for president of the student body.

A margin of 772 votes led the University Party's Gray to victory over Smith, Student Party nominee for president of student government.

The University Party also took the vice president, secretary and treasurer positions in the executive department of student government.

For the vice presidency David Grigg had 1,305 votes against Jim Crowover's 1,557 votes.

The closest race of the big four was for secretary. Final tabulations gave Sue Wood 1,809 votes to Ann Luca's 1,666, a margin of 243.

Bob Bingham won the office of treasurer over Erwin Fuller 1,878 to 1,522.

Unopposed for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, Davis Young received 2350. There were over 600 votes cast for write-ins with Henry S. Snow taking 54 of them.

Bob Austin and Tom Overman took a lead of 1629 over Mike Smith as co-editors of the Yackety-Yack. Austin and Overman had 2451 votes to Smith's 822.

Bill Crutchfield led for Men's Honor Council with 201 votes and was followed closely by David Harper with 162 and George Campbell with 146 for the two other Honor Council seats.

Angus Duff won a sweeping victory for president of the Carolina Athletic Association, while Charlie Graham polled enough to soundly whip Dick Rhyme for head cheerleader.

In all 3611 students cast ballots in the spring election.

BULLETIN

Erwin Fuller was elected Student Council Chairman last night, as the 1958-59 council performed its last official act.

Fuller, defeated Student Party treasurer candidate, served on the Student Council throughout the past year. Fuller is a junior.

The council also selected Joe Warner as clerk for the next year.

Henderson: Not A Mill Community

By RON SHUMATE

(This is the fourth of a series on the town of Henderson in the wake of a four month strike. The series was compiled by Ron Shumate and Peter Ness.)

Henderson is not a mill town.

Henderson is a middle-size town composed of a middle-class people—as a whole. The town's population, about 11,000, is composed largely of non-mill workers.

The strike which has been waging for 21 weeks at the Harriet-Henderson Cotton Mill, the town's largest industry, has put about 1,200 people out of work—just over one tenth of the total population.

But the mill payroll prior to the strike was $64,000 per week. It was dwindled to about $24,000 per week. And the town's economy has suffered.

But apparently no one has gone out of business—unless some of the very small grocers in the heart of the mill area have done so.

Henderson is a quiet town. It has one central street, on which are the large part of the town's businesses.

The city hall, police and fire stations, the sheriff's office and other city and county offices are located on this main artery.

The southern part of Henderson is predominantly residential—particularly near the city limits.

But in the northern end of the town are located, in addition to the mill village, several motels, restaurants, the highway patrol headquarters and another mill.

A railroad line runs through the town, a block to the left of the main street, going north. One might even say the railroad serves to split the town into two separate factions, as both the North and South Henderson mill villages lie beyond the railroad.

And, to a great degree, the town is divided into two classes—the mill workers and the remainder of the town.

One Henderson resident put it like this: "Suppose you live in one of the better residential districts of town and date a girl, from South Henderson, for instance. Well, people will say, 'He goes with a girl from South Henderson; but they won't say, 'He goes with Betty' or Susie or whoever it may be. This just gives you one example of the way the town is split up."

The majority of the mill houses are nothing more than simple frame houses—many of them are in need of repair. But some of them have new paint, and have been patched up to look much better than others. In fact, some of them look as nice as some of the homes in the "better" residential sections of town.

The 10 p.m. curfew that was called for Monday by Mayor Carroll Singleton is certainly something that is needed. Though the sidewalks are virtually deserted after sundown, quite a few teen-agers were out in cars. A local drive-in restaurant was crowded with cars about 10:00 last Friday night, but virtually deserted 30 minutes later.

One car-load of teen-agers sped past shouting, "Let's race." Other cars containing teen-agers were seen all over town, but primarily on the main streets—the ones with the most lighting. Very few cars, with the exception of State Highway Patrol cars and the "night watchers," were on the more dimly-lit streets.

Late at night nearly all the motels near the Highway Patrol headquarters in North Henderson were filled with the troopers' silver and black cars.

As we rode around through the mill area, our headlights flicked on a house situated at an intersection where two streets formed a "T." (The house was at the end of the street that formed the base of the "T").

Only a fraction of a minute had passed after our headlights had hit the house, when two large floodlights came on and a man and woman ran out into the yard. As we turned the corner and drove on by, they walked around to the back of the house to watch us. The man held something long and slender in his hands.

Saturday, we stopped at a house that was dynamited several weeks ago. As Pete took some pictures of the house, I waited in the car. Two husky young men, each about 25, strolled over to the car.

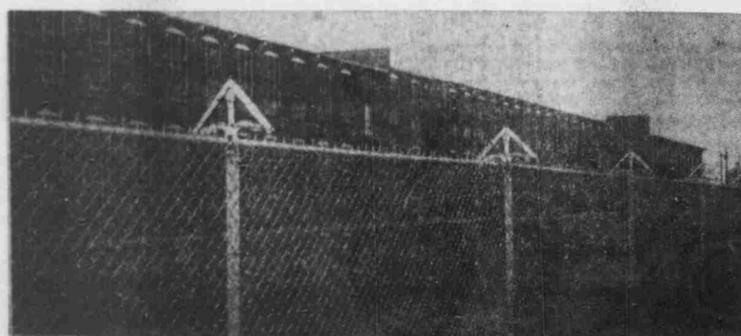

"Where you from?" one of them asked.

I told him, "You don't work over in the mill, do you?" he asked. He emphasized the word "work."

I assured him that I did not work in the mill.

"Well, we just wanted to make sure," he said. "We don't allow none of them workers to take any pictures over here."

Later in the day, as we rode by the North Henderson union hall, we stopped to take a picture of the hall. As we sat there—only for a minute or so—several strikers looked at us, looked at each other and several of them started to walk toward us. That was one time I was thankful for a good right foot and four wheels

Common Government Necessary -- Smith

"People can't live in close contact without fighting, unless they live under a common government," MacNeill Smith of Greensboro, a leader in the world government organization in North Carolina, said here Thursday.

Smith was the keynote speaker at the first plenary session in Memorial Hall Thursday night for the United Nations Model Assembly.

In his address he said a way to prevent wars is to live under a system of single government on an international scale, some what the same way that people have similar governments in towns, states and nations.

"The people of the world are now in daily contact with one another," said the Greensboro attorney, "a result of trade and scientific improvements in transportation and communication. Whether we like it or not, it's so"

"The people of the world, living in close daily contact can't get along without fighting, sooner or later, unless they live under a common government. It is naive to think otherwise. But in spite of two World Wars, many people haven't seen it yet."

Smith advocated to the assembly a revision of the United Nations to lead towards stronger world government in endeavors to reduce armaments and taxation, as well as to find peace, prosperity and freedom.

The model assembly's economic, political and disarmament committees will meet today from 9 a.m. to 12 noon with an hour coffee break

Dormitory Officers Elected

In the run-off elections Thursday for men's dormitory presidents and Interdormitory Council representatives, the following were selected:

Nelson Lowe, president of Cobb; Peter Williams, president, and Larry Stacy, IDC representative, for Lewis; Ron Britt, president of Parker, and Joe Davenport, IDC representative for Stacy.

Another run-off election will be held Tuesday between Al Haines and Bill Williams for IDC representative in Grimes.

IDC President Otto Funderburk announced that he was satisfied with the turnouts at the polls Tuesday and Thursday.
