Tornadoes Caused By Gracie Claim 11 Virginia Lives

By The Associated Press

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., (AP) — Federal weather experts Thursday sought some scientific clues to the origin of a killer tornado as the body of an 11th victim was found near the wreckage of a home at the nearby community of Ivy.

Shirley Ann Morris, 3, was found dead huddled at the base of a tree. Nine other members of the Morris family died almost immediately when the twister struck their duplex farm home late yesterday. The other fatality was a neighbor, killed by a falling chimney.

The child apparently was the one a witness said just seemed to be swooped up into the sky when the hoodluminous tornado, spawned by dying tropical storm Gracie, demolished the Morris home.

The tornadoes, perhaps as many as three or four, struck the area with no advance warning as the former hurricane Gracie moved northward across Western Virginia on a wall of rain.

There was an almost complete blackout of communications with the Ivy community with phone lines down and water and trees blocking arterial U. S. 250 from Charlottesville west.

Meteorologist Kenneth Rice at Richmond's Byrd Field said the weather wasn't the type that would justify a continuous watch on the radar screen. He said images that denoted squally weather weren't strong enough to indicate tornadoes.

Several witnesses reported sighting the classic funnel-shaped spinner that roared through with the noise of an express train.

There had been forecasts of nothing more than heavy rain and moderate winds for the area as a result of Gracie when the first twister struck near Ivy at about 2:30 p.m., doing minor damage. Then two hours later, a second twister spun down out of a blinding rain squall.

It demolished the duplex home where 12 of the 14 members of the families of Ervin Morris Sr., 48, and his son, Ervin Jr., 21, were waiting out the storm. The house was smashed as if by a giant ax. And the bodies were flung like chips into a patch of woods. Rescuers who finally made their hampered way through tree-blocked and flooded roads found the bodies scattered over a 400-yard area.

A hundred yards from the Morris place, the blow uprooted the house of Raymond Bruce, 58. A stone chimney toppled, killing his wife, Lilly, 56. Bruce and his son suffered only slight hurts.

Killed in the Morris duplex were Ervin Sr., his wife Frances, also in her late 40's; their children, Wilmer, 15, Ruby, 15, and James, 18; Mrs. Ervin Morris Jr., 18, and her children, Shirley Ann, 3; Peggy, 1, and Michael, an infant. George Morris, 40, a brother of Ervin Morris Sr., also was killed.

Following the tour, the group will return to Durham.

Two Students Jailed In Auto Damage

Two UNC students were apprehended Wednesday night in the act of damaging automobiles near Melver Dorm on Raleigh Road.

According to Chapel Hill police, Officer James Farrell heard the sound of glass breaking as he patrolled his beat about midnight. Upon investigation, he is reported to have discovered a broken window in a 1959 Ford Thunderbird owned by Beverly Foard, a Melver resident, and found two boys attempting to damage the automobile.

Farrell reportedly took the pair to the police station. At 1:30 a.m. yesterday morning Ray Jefferies, Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, was called to the station to investigate the affair and to help in the release of the boys.

Jefferies Thursday declined to divulge the names of the arrested pair.

Miss Foard stated that "about 12 or 12:30 p.m. someone came in and told me about the damage. I understand that other automobiles were harmed also; a pair of license plates were removed, I believe."

Injunction, Expected This Week, Not Filed

The attempt by Mr. and Mrs. Lee Vickers, a Carrboro Negro couple, to have their ten-year-old son, Stanley, assigned to the all-white Carrboro Elementary School appeared to have hit a snag this week. A lawsuit against the Chapel Hill School Board has not been as scheduled.

Bids Available

USE OF FLASH CARDS

In a statement concerning the use of flash cards at football games Swag Grimsley, chairman of the Student Athletic Council, had the following to say: "Many students are endangered by the sharp corners of the cards thrown in the cardboard section on Saturday afternoons." He urged students to use the cards for the intended purpose.

Conrad O. Pearson, the Durham attorney serving as the Vickers' counsel, had stated earlier that the suit asking for an injunction against racial discrimination in the Chapel Hill schools would be filed in Greensboro this week, but no action had been taken by yesterday, and none was expected.

Pearson has indicated that his clients may carry the case to the Supreme Court if the present attempt is unsuccessful, even though the local board has announced that integration will be initiated here next year at the first grade level.

Even if the Vickers family wins its case in Middle District Court, the child would not be placed in an all-white school until next September.

A petition for reassignment was filed more than a year ago by Mr. and Mrs. Vickers, and since then their request has been denied by the County Board of Education and the local school board.

Dean Henry Brandis of the UNC Law School resigned from the board in protest this summer after the petition was rejected. He agreed to remain on the board until an appeal could be heard. Dean Brandis permanently left the board after this second motion was rejected last month.

In case the Vickers do file suit, the school board will have 30 days in which to answer charges. Once the school board files its answer, Federal Judge Edwin Stanley then will set a trial date.

Last week's inaugural meeting, "which was attended by a record-setting number of interested students," by no means shuts off available positions, said Miss Combes.

Oil Fire Erupts In Charleston After Gracie's Initial Blow

By BOB MCHUGH

CHARLESTON, S. C. — (AP) — Still reeling from hurricane Gracie's blows, Charleston settled down Thursday to wage a desperate battle with an oil company fire that threatened to spread to millions of gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

The fire erupted in a thunderous explosion about 5 a.m., at the north edge of the city. Two million gallons of gasoline in a storage tank went up in a blazing sheet of flame, injuring nine and destroying three houses 200 yards away.

The city and county had suffered about 4 1/2 million dollars in damage from the hurricane Tuesday.

The towering fire raged out of control at the Esso Standard Oil Co. plant. Firefighters concentrated on trying to keep it from spreading to 31 other huge storage tanks.

"We have the fire contained, but by no means controlled," Plant Superintendent C. W. Matthews said hours after the explosion.

The biggest threat was to a tank of one million gallons of gasoline, linked by a vapor line to the burning tank. Also close to the flames were two tanks containing 4 million gallons of diesel fuel.

North Charleston Fire Chief Herman Foorer said the threatened tank of gasoline was getting about "everything we have," 18 streams of water to keep it cool.

Residents within a quarter of a mile were evacuated. Some attempts were made to smother the big fire by Air Force smoke-eaters in asbestos suits using foam. But major efforts were concentrated on keeping it from spreading.

Of the nine Negro residents of the area injured, only 59-year-old Jesse Jones was hospitalized. The others were treated and dismissed. One injured man, Leroy Chandler, left the hospital swathed in bandages to try to find a gold watch left in his home.

The small frame dwelling, however, had been reduced to a pile of kindling. The 65-year-old Chandler was blown from the house when a bedroom wall collapsed.

He regained consciousness in a cemetery 75 yards away. He said he had been blown the entire distance and over a 12-foot fence.
