SYMINGTON CHARGES IKE ADMINISTRATION

WASHINGTON—Sen. Stuart Symington accused the Eisenhower administration Thursday of deliberately withholding facts about the "missile gap" from President Kennedy during last year's political campaign.

The Missouri Democrat made his charge during Senate debate over the controversy stirred up by a private briefing given by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara which led to newspaper stories saying no such gap existed between the United States and Russia.

HARRIMAN MAY GO TO BONN

WASHINGTON—President Kennedy is expected to send roving ambassador Averell Harriman to Bonn to try to convince West Germany it should step up its plan to help stop the drain on U. S. gold and dollars.

Official sources said Thursday that Harriman would deal directly with Chancellor Konrad Adenauer bearing out the President's news conference statement Wednesday that the problem must be tackled at a "higher level."

SOVIETS CHARGE FRENCH IN PLANE INCIDENT

Roper, McCoy Won't Press Charges Against Art Heyman; Apologize To Student Body

By BILL MORRISON

"We have pressed no charges and at present we do not wish to testify," stated cheerleaders Al Roper and Tim McCoy in a letter to the DTH Thursday.

Discussing their position in the Art Heyman trial which is scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday in Durham Recorder's Court, the pair wanted it understood that they apologized for any strained relations which they might have caused between Carolina and Duke.

The trial grew out of a warrant listing both as prosecuting witnesses, which was served on Heyman Wednesday in the Durham Police Department.

The warrant charged the Duke basketball player with "assault and battery with hands and fists" on a Carolina student (Roper).

The warrant for Heyman's arrest was signed by former Assistant Solicitor of Durham County Superior Court Blackwell M. Brogden.

Brogden said

Brogden said that he was a witness to the incident which reportedly saw Heyman strike Roper on the back of the head during halftime at the Carolina-Duke game held last Saturday night in Durham.

(It might be noted that this was just one of two incidents involving Heyman during the game. The second occurred when a fracas broke out between the two teams during the last nine seconds of the game.)

Neither Heyman nor Duke Coach Vic Bubas have commented on the incident and Assistant Duke Coach Fred Shabel has said that there would be "no comment" at this time.

In their letter to the DTH,

Roper and McCoy explained their decision:

Boys Apologize

"We should like to apologize to the students and faculty of the University of North Carolina, as well as of Duke University, for any part which we may have played in the recent activities which seem to have impaired relations between the two schools.

"It was stated that we had instigated a law suit against Mr. Heyman, charging him with assault and battery. We should like to make the point quite clear, that we were merely asked to serve as witnesses for the incident. We have pressed no charges and at present we do not wish to testify. (Their emphasis.—Ed.)

"In spite of the fact that we do not condone Mr. Heyman's activities, this should not be a sufficient reason to seriously impair relations between the two schools, or to degrade the names of the schools, Mr. Heyman, or ourselves."

'Clever, Terrifying Irony' Problem For Star

Playmakers' 'Visit' Feb. 15

By GORDON CLARK

William Trotman has a problem, but it's the kind of problem he likes, as an actor. The 29-year-old Winston-Salem native is playing the male lead in the Carolina Playmakers' production of "The Visit" in Chapel Hill February 15-19, and he says the second act of the award-winning play presents him with "the most difficult emotional quality" he's ever tried to sustain on a stage.

For Trotman this is no small statement. The young actor-designer has appeared in scores of productions throughout the country, including leading roles opposite Boris Karloff in "Arsenic and Old Lace" at Anchorage, Alaska, and with Eugenie Leontovich in "The Cave Dwellers" at Houston, Texas. He calls his current role of Anton Schill in "The Visit" one of the best he's ever had.

Play 'Masterpiece'

"The play is a masterpiece in a clever, terrifying sort of irony," Trotman says.

The play, written by Friedrich Duerrenmatt, is the story of a fabulously wealthy old lady who returns to the poverty-stricken town of her youth for a frightening purpose—to take the life of her girlhood lover, played by Trotman.

But her revenge goes deeper than this, for she wants this man, now a respectable citizen whom she still strangely loves, to be killed by his fellow townsmen and friends, who had ridiculed her as a girl.

"Each scene builds terrifically to what is really a horrifying climax, and a disturbing realization," Trotman says.

Receives Award

The Duerrenmatt play received the Best Foreign Play of 1958 award when presented on Broadway with Alfred Lunt and Lynne Fontanne in the leading roles.

A 1953 graduate of the University of North Carolina, Trotman returned to the University this year to complete work on his master's degree.

But during his time away from the University, Trotman was busy in theatre work all over the country. He studied acting with Stella Adler, instructor of such well-known personalities as Marlon Brando, and at the American Theatre Wing in New York.

Trotman Appears

Trotman has already appeared in one show this season, the Playmakers' production of Dylan Thomas' "Under Milk Wood." In previous seasons, he acted with the Playmakers in such shows as "Death of a Salesman," "The Crucible," and "Arsenic and Old Lace."

"The University teaches good, sound basic techniques in theatre that can be used anywhere,"

HIS LIFE ENDANGERED by his fellow townsmen, Anton Schill (played by William Trotman of Winston-Salem) realizes the hopelessness of his situation in "The Visit," opening Wednesday, February 15, for a five-day run in the Playmakers Theatre. Tickets are available for Wednesday, Thursday, and Sunday evenings from the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall (next to the Scuttlebutt) and at Ledbetter-Pickards in downtown Chapel Hill. Standing room only is available for Friday and Saturday evenings. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

Allotment Would Hike Tuition

GOV. SANFORD

The Advisory Budget Commission yesterday presented the General Assembly with a record-breaking $1.5 billion biennium budget, which included a bond issue for a Carolina student union-undergraduate library.

Gov. Terry Sanford addressed the legislature after the budget report had been presented.

He indicated that he will ask the legislature for additional funds for schools—in addition to what the Commission recommended—and is prepared to recommend tax increases, if necessary, to raise the money.

It was recommended by the Commission that the Consolidated University and the nine smaller state-supported colleges be appropriated $12 million for teachers' salaries, scholarships, etc.; (the C.U. individually) $13.1 million for capital improvements; and an estimated $2,200,000 to be raised by increased tuition costs for students.

Former Gov. Luther Hodges helped the Commission prepare its budget report, in addition to appointing the members of the Commission.

Gov. Sanford sat in on Commission meetings from the time of his election to the present.

Commission Recommends

The Commission recommended (only the Assembly has the power to appropriate) that $1,622,000 of the money needed to build the combination student union-undergraduate library at UNC be raised by a bond issue.

The bond issue would have to be passed by, first, the Assembly and then, the general populace.

The remaining million dollars for the student union would be self-liquidating bonds.

Increased Tuition

Tuition would be increased for both in-state and out-of-state students, if the legislature accepts the Commission's recommendation.

North Carolina students would pay $25 a year more (making a year's tuition cost $175); and out-of-staters would pay $100 a year more (making a year's tuition cost $600).

C.U. officials, notably President William Friday, in the past have opposed tuition cost raising for North Carolina students and worked to keep the hikes down for out-of-staters.

N. Y. Publisher Raps 'Wrong Ideas'

By MICHAEL ROBINSON

Bernard Kilgore, president and publisher of The Wall Street Journal, spoke forcefully on the widespread "wrong ideas" that the public and some newspapermen have about American newspapers.

Speaking last Wednesday in Howell Hall on "Newspaper Facts and Fancies—1961," Kilgore stated that "a great deal of damage has been done by the misconception that there are only a few great newspapers in America because they are big city newspapers. Size is not the important factor."

"This emphasis on size does harm to the growth of smaller newspapers and discourages talented young people from joining them. Nobody is in a position to judge the greatness of a newspaper because no one can be familiar with all the newspapers in the different sections of the country."

Kilgore, wearing a conservative dark suit, but speaking in an "off the cuff" home-spun manner, said that contrary to the trend in most other industries, newspapers in future decades would not be looking for people with specialized training, such as science writers, medical writers or business writers, who take graduate work in these fields.

Need For Journalists

"The need," he said, "will be for talented journalists. A reporter is specialized enough as it is. Specialized training can be acquired on the job."

"We have the biggest market for business writers, but we are not in the market for business writers."

What do newspapers really need?

"There is a need for newsmen who understand local government and community problems. The local editors need these tough problems in public affairs handled by talented men and women who can cope with them."

"The primary need is for all-around administrators on the editorial side. That is the area they should aim for. There is lots of room for talented people at the top. Also there are many opportunities for talented editorial writers who can write and think in depth."

Duke, UNC Clash In Hockey Match

Duke and Carolina will clash tonight at 8:00 in the finale of their three-game hockey series. The hockey match will be held at the Holiday Ice Rink on highway 70.

Duke won the first match of the series, 3-1. Carolina took the second by 5-1. This will be the deciding game.

French Tragedy Is On Flick List

"An overwhelming success," was the term used by Warren Williams, GM Films Committee chairman, to describe the reaction to his group's decision to screen three showings of "Brigadoon" last Saturday night instead of the usual two.

In light of this success Williams went on to add that in the future the committee will continue to add extra Free Flick showings about three times a month for films which show indications of having a large popular appeal.

An adventure story, a war drama, and a French tragedy highlight this week-end's Free Flick entertainment.

Tonight's film is "The Treasure of Sierra Madre," starring Humphrey Bogart and Walter Huston.

The story of a gold prospecting trip in Mexico, this is the stark, hard-hitting account of three American derelicts who bring a violent and damaging fate on themselves through their mutual greed and distrust.

John Huston, who directed the film, was awarded an Oscar for this study of human relationships.
