racial problems, and keep it until the problems are solved." Specifically, he proposed: —That a clear declaration be made of the Town's firm intentions "to lick the race problem in Chapel Hill."

—That a clear statement of what has happened, what is happening, and what is planned in racial matters be published.

—That a professional agency with a board of citizens be established to work full time to solve the race problem.

Dr. Adams said he did not know whether this agency would be officially a part of the Town's government, or unofficial "with official blessings." It would, however, hear grievances, plan projects, and seek funds. It would "try to compensate in various ways for the inequality school," and would also try to improve the Negro situation with a day care center, work with the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, adult education, a job placement service, and coordination with the Chapel Hill Housing Authority, among other means.

Mrs. Taylor, who had been informed of Dr. Adams' proposal before the meeting, said the Human Relations Committee hoped to get financial help "from the major foundations" to finance a professional staff for the agency for 10-12 years.

Those at the meeting reacted favorably. Alderman Hubert Robinson said work should begin on the proposal immediately. County Commissioner Gordon Cleveland said the day care center recently proposed by Orange County for financial assistance from the North Carolina Fund would work well with such an agency's intentions. Earthquake? Here? There Sure Are!

By MAT FRIEDMAN

To most people, an earthquake is something you read about in the papers but never experience. So it may come as a surprise to find out that earthquakes are a pretty common occurrence in North Carolina.

According to Dr. Gerald MacCarthy of the Department of Geology, they have even occurred here in Chapel Hill. He points out, however, that most occur in the mountains or on the coast, chiefly near Wilmington.

"Most of the earthquakes here are very small," he says. The last one to occur in this area took place near Galax, Va., in October, but it was felt in about four North Carolina counties."

Dr. MacCarthy, who has been studying the tremors for 10 years, explains that he is trying to correlate their occurrence with the geology of the areas in which they occur. "We like to know where they occur," he says, "how strong they are, how deep underground they take place, and when possible, what causes them."

"Those in the mountains are a result of the constant mountain building activity that is always taking place. Although this building is too small to be detected by the human eye, it does cause small quakes. We don't know what causes the earthquakes near the coast."

The actual work of detecting disturbances is done by the department's seismograph. Earthquakes which occur as much as thousands of miles away, says Dr. MacCarthy, cause some movement of the ground in Chapel Hill. The seismograph magnifies this movement 25,000 times and records it on film. It is so sensitive, in fact, that even the vibration caused by the movement of Chapel Hill traffic is recorded.
