'Temporary' Housing Built In 1946 Contrasts Sharply . . .

—Katherine Kennedy Carmichael—A Good Egg—

Dressed with quiet elegance, she wore her pince-nez on a silver chain about her neck. Short blonde hair and blue eyes were complimented by her black suit and charming old-fashioned jewelry.
Most of her time at UNC has been spent in an administrative capacity, although for her first five years she taught several English classes. She has kept up with teaching, concentrating primarily in the area of "English as a second language."
Dean Carmichael came to UNC in 1946 from Wisconsin, where she was visiting lecturer in English.
"The most obvious change in Carolina," she noted, "has been in the size of the student body. When I came here, there were 1100 women students. Now there are 2,300 but at one time enrollment dropped below 900."
One of Dean Carmichael's greatest accomplishments, she feels, in her administrative career, has been the maintenance of personal contact with each woman student in the University. There is a personal worker for each 60 women in the student body, unusual in schools the size of UNC.

When travel is mentioned there is an immediate gleam of response from Dean Carmichael because it is one of her favorite topics.
She has traveled in Mexico, Canada, the Caribbean and has been twice around the world. In 1951-52 she was a Fulbright Lecturer at the Philippine Normal College in Manila. She also taught in Saigon, South Vietnam, where she set up a course in English as a second language.
"Students are similar the world over," she said. "All are, of course, creatures of their culture, but among students there are many more similarities than differences."
A well-filled bookcase lines one will of the busy Dean's office, scattered with mementoes of her travels and her years of teaching. Books with red, buff, blue Vietnamese bindings, gold and purple baskets from India, Burma and the South Seas and book ends from the Philippines are colorful reminders of her trips.

These point out her great interest in Southeast Asia, one of her favorite topics and she is often invited to speak on. Last month she was at Wilmington College for Fine Arts Week, where she spoke on the cultural background of Southeast Asia. Next month she will attend a Southeast Asian seminar at Duke.
African violets and planters of greenery are prominent in her South Building office. These are hobbies, along with a cat she was given when she was in Saigon.
"She was just a white fluff then, and we've been through much together, including a raid and a bombing. She was mated to a Siamese who now lives on the rooftops of Paris, and later had three kittens. My friends call her MiMi, but in Saigon she was called 'Miaou', the usual name for kitty in that area.
Miaou, she says may be intelligent for a cat, but not for anything else.

The seven-year house that the University built 18 years ago is still standing and is growing in demand with the passing of time. In 1946 the University constructed temporary prefabricated housing to alleviate an acute shortage which had developed with the great influx of married veterans returning from WW II to continue their education under the GI Bill. The housing was built to stand for seven years, at which time it was supposed to be removed and replaced with permanent construction.

Most of the buildings are still being used today for married student housing. The development is old Victory Village.

The fact that the housing is still in use has been consistently criticized by newspapers, campus political parties and student government leaders.

The housing has been referred to as egg-crate construction, fire-traps, and handboxes.

There is, however, at least one man on this campus who defends the housing as a necessity and an asset. The man is James E. Wadsworth.

Wadsworth, a graduate of UNC in 1934, is now director of student housing for the University. He has held that post since its creation in 1946.

"There is a need for low cost housing which presently can not be met through any other way," he said. Wadsworth pointed out that rising construction costs have made the building of low cost married student housing impossible. "The University is not willing to borrow money for the construction of temporary housing such as old Victory Village," he added.

Wadsworth said a paradox has arisen out of the latest effort to provide married students with adequate housing. Just recently, the University spent two million dollars for the construction of 308 brick apartment units.

The new apartments rent for $72 to $82 per month. The prefabricated apartments in old Victory Village rent for $23 to $27 per month.

"We have at least 25 students who have moved into the new housing and then have requested to be allowed to move into the old units as soon as possible because they can not afford the rent they now pay."

Wadsworth said there was just enough room to grant all of these requests.

The result, Wadsworth said, was that quite a few students have to drop out of school simply because they could not afford the new housing or privately owned housing in town.

Wadsworth maintained the physical status of the housing was as good as most of the apartments being offered in Chapel Hill. The hazard of fire, he added, is equally as negligible.

"The most wonderful thing about old Victory Village, Wadsworth said, "is that it has enabled a great many people to go through school when they would not have been able to do so because of financial reasons. There are many men," he continued, "now at UNC who have lived in old Victory Village at one time or another." The list included President Friday and Chancellor Aycock.
