Seven Combinations Tried By Tar Heels

By PAT STITH

For 16 games North Carolina coach Dean Smith has been looking for the right combination. Last Saturday against Maryland he employed his seventh different line-up but the move brought no luck. Maryland won and evened the Tar Heels' overall mark at 8-8.

In all, 10 different players have been used as starters. Only Bob Lewis (20.3) and Billy Cunningham (24.8), the two Carolina superstars who are pouring in points at the rate of 45 a game, have survived all the shake-ups and retained their jobs.

Ray Respass, a 6-4 senior who earned himself a place on the first team as a sophomore, has received the nod in 14 games.

Smith opened the season against Clemson with Cunningham, Lewis, Respass, Brown, and Bennett. That same group started and lost to Georgia in the second game and a change was made.

Morrison took Brown's place and North Carolina beat South Carolina and Kentucky. That is the only combination that has been completely successful.

Gauntlett took Bennett's place in the Tulane game and the line-up remained the same—Cunningham, Lewis, Respass, Morrison, Gauntlett—for a total of five games.

They won three of four before dropping the VPI Invitational championship to Alabama. After that Coach Smith experimented with 6-6 Mirken and Brown in place of Gauntlett and Morrison but Florida whipped that combination by 19 points.

For the following game Coach Smith went back to his original line-up but the Tar Heels continued to lose, taking their first ACC defeat at the hands of Maryland.

Against Wake Forest, in the 12th game of the season Smith completely revamped the North Carolina starting unit. Along with Cunningham and Lewis he used Brown, Mirken, and Bennett. Wake won by 22.

For the Duke game Smith dialed a new combination, using Respass, Hassell, and Gauntlett along with Bob and Billy. Those five pulled a stunning upset against the Blue Devils, but then blew a 14-point lead in a loss to N. C. State, and next won over Virginia.

The seventh combination came against Maryland Saturday. In that game Mirken, who has appeared in all 16 games, got his third starting job along with Johnny Yokley.
