

LIKE A BAMBOO JUNGLE.

the supporting iron rods shoot up under the new Psychology building going up where old Davie Hall used to stand. All over campus the workmen have been hammering and clanking for the long busy summer. These silhouettes of work briefly describe the activities in New Davie Hall. For students returning, they will notice the new face of the town and University. Powerful Hinton James Residence Hall is climbing upwards. Emerson Field has sprouted World War II barracks and new Granville Hall rises from the dust of the old High School on Franklin Street. Grants Totaling $660,000 Boost Population Program

The University's population program has been given a substantial boost with the approval of two teaching and research proposals totaling $660,000. The Executive Committee of the Rockefeller Foundation has agreed to provide $260,000 to help establish a family planning unit within the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the UNC School of Medicine. The grant is for a five-year period. A second grant of $400,000 over a three-year period will support two programs. An educational materials center will be established with $300,000 under the joint supervision of the Department of Health Education at the School of Public Health and the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures. The School of Journalism will receive $100,000 to pioneer the development of a computerized information retrieval service for literature in the population field. Dr. John B. Graham, chairman of the policy board of the UNC Population Studies Center, is the principal investigator for the two projects. The teaching and research unit in family planning is proposed as a major division in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology under the direction of departmental chairman Dr. Harry S. McGaughey Jr. The unit will be much broader in scope than fertility control. Its functions will include pre-marital and post-marital consultations; evaluation of birth control methods; studies of reproductive failures and instruction of medical, nursing and public health students and paramedical personnel.
