Dr. Mackie Retires, Professor Emeritus

The towering mathematics professor can derive formulas, balance equations and shuffle fractions. But he can't begin to calculate the number of students he's taught during his 45 years on the University faculty. "Thousands," Prof. Ernest L. Mackie estimates the number of men and women who have passed through his classes. As the only faculty officer in the UNC chapter of Phi Beta Kappa for the past 21 years, he has personally initiated hundreds of the University's top graduates—including his own son and daughter—into the nation's highest scholastic honor.

Prof. Mackie isn't returning to the classroom this fall. Retiring with the distinguished title of "Professor Emeritus," he leaves behind a record of devoted service to the University as teacher, administrative dean and supervisor of several student honoraries.

Prof. Mackie was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in 1916 during his junior year at UNC. With the second highest average in his class, he became secretary of the chapter.

He obtained his M.A. from Harvard, the Ph.D. from Chicago, and taught for a while at Clemson and Harvard. After joining the faculty here, he was named to Phi Beta Kappa's executive committee.

Since 1958, Prof. Mackie has served as a senator from the South Atlantic District in the national organization of Phi Beta Kappa. He's now serving a second six-year term, which ends in 1970. Though he's turning over his local post to Dr. Claude George, associate dean of business administration, he plans to complete his term as senator from the nine-state district.

Over the years, Prof. Mackie has served as Dean of Men, Dean of Students, Dean of Student Awards and Distinctions and faculty advisor to Phi Eta Sigma, freshman scholarship fraternity which he established here in 1947.

A member of the Golden Fleece, he also belongs to Sigma Xi scientific fraternity and Phi Gamma Delta social fraternity. In 1963, he received a Tanner Award for excellence in teaching.

"I've enjoyed my contact with students over the years," says the retiring professor. "It's helped keep me young."

He doesn't see much difference in the present college generation and students of his own decades ago. "There's simply more of them," he observes.

"Today's students are much better prepared and more up-to-date academically," he added. "They have more to do and more sense with which to do it."

Old Book Chatter-

Since last June, when you chaps dashed off to catch fish and mountain lions and women and all those things, your sedate Old Book Corner has not been drooping as much as you might think.

To take the big things first, a couple of right good libraries, one on STATISTICAL SOCIOLOGY, and another on ASIA, went out in the feature case, as did a smaller, but rather nice group of books on LINGUISTICS. You'll find bits and pieces of them scattered about, mostly on the 97c and 58c shelves.

Also brought in during the summer were libraries on AMERICAN COLONIAL LITERATURE and SOCIOLOGY, which we thought were too good for off-season showing, and which will be coming out this fall. If you're interested and will leave your name, we'll drop you a card when we get them processed.

A lot of less organized and smaller clumps came in—as a matter of fact, this was our most successful buying Summer—and are now in the various cases. Especially tempting are some books on the South and the Gold Rush days in the West.

Finally, the prices have had a thorough going over, and you can be reasonably sure that any book you find in the Old Book Corner has either been bought in, or had its price clipped, since June.

COME IN AND RELAX. You'll find the back of the intimate same lazy spot you remembered, and if your soul is all scratched up from the hurly-burly of text buying, it's a wonderful spot to heal your wounds!

Dex: Rest Just Doesn't Help At All

Hedgepeth says that once the effects of the pill or pills wear out, the student is "more burned out" than he was to start with.

These comments were borne out by a student who remarked, "I stayed up on dex two nights ago, and plenty of rest just doesn't help at all. It takes you a couple of days before you can really live again."

Responsible Use
But at the same time, this student also said, "I wouldn't use them unless I used them responsibly. You can't ask for dex all the time."

With the beginning courses, the demand for dex is on the rise again, and there will no doubt be students who will be taking dex for the first time, especially some who are on the verge of being drafted if they fail to meet certain academic standards.

When faced with such a question, lower classmen generally turn to their residence hall advisors. These seniors or graduate students serve as counselors to about 40 other students.

Two advisers questioned on what they would tell students if asked about using stimulants to study gave completely opposing views.

Both are honor students and have maintained high scholastic averages. One said he was completely opposed to their use, and termed stimulants "an artificial way of achieving results. He said he has never taken any "dex" himself, and instead uses coffee and cold showers to stay awake while studying for final examinations.

Dissuades Advisees
He said that if he knew of any of his advisees using "dex" he would attempt to dissuade them.

The other adviser, after being assured his name would not be used, admitted openly that he himself took stimulants, "a maximum of once a month."

"People take them from sheer necessity," this senior commented, and then gave the following reply as to what he tells his advisees:

"Everybody I know uses them. I can't say who does it, because it's against the law; but I tell them that I take them; I tell them the truth. "The consensus is that nobody likes them, but that quizzes close together force them to do it. Yet I would never give them any or tell them of a source."

"I have heard of people who have ill effects from staying up two or three nights in a row, but these are only rumors. I have never known anyone who has had any trouble."

Then he added, "I guess you have to look at both sides and take the risk."

How did he begin using them?

"I knew a guy who had one; I had two exams in a row my sophomore year, and I needed the extra study time. I feel that my performance was helped a lot by the extra study time, and that I was hindered very little by staying up (all night)."

Put Out The Word
How does he himself get them?

"I put out the word... which results in somebody saying, 'hey I know somebody' or 'I can get some for you.' He noted that some of his sources have included sons of pharmacists and pharmacy students.

As a final comment he said, "I have been tempted several times to ask my doctor for them, but I was afraid of what he might tell me." Earlier he had said:

Court in the Judicial Department. It presently is being considered by the Judicial Committee of Legislature.

Purdy would not predict the outcome of the bill but did say there is a possibility of other bills on judicial reform being introduced.

Several bills providing for residence hall improvement will probably join two that already have been introduced. The two being considered now ask for $400 each for social facilities in Old East and Old West.

There are also rumors that one legislator has a plan to reduce the cost of textbooks. "There will also be a study of our system of governing ourselves," Purdy said.

In this field, there will be a lengthy bill introduced to reform the election laws. Included in the bill will be a section to avoid a repeat of last spring's election when all votes for Legislature in Morrison were invalidated when a candidate withdrew officially about noon on election day. A second election was needed to select the four Morrison representatives.

Purdy also expects the legislators to do a lot of work behind the scenes.

"My philosophy on items which involve administrative decisions is to work quietly without publicity. After all, the Administration makes the decision," Purdy said.

"It is easier for Student Government and the Administration to compromise on issues if they haven't been forced to take public stands."

Purdy feels that this session of Legislature may produce more bills and resolutions than any in the past.

"For every gripe on campus he said, "there is the potential for a bill."

"Students have to complain to the people who can do something about their complaint. After the complaint is heard, then we can make the needed change."

This session of Legislature has had 46 bills introduced since it convened in April. Many of them were approving appointments of President Bob Powell as he set up his administration.

Also introduced and passed was the $220,000 budget of Student Government. The budget included the requisition system which is aimed at preventing organizations from over-exceeding their budget.

Of the 46 bills introduced, 29 have already been passed. Purdy said the number of bills introduced probably exceeds the number introduced by any session of Legislature at this point.

"We have a lot of legislators who are serving their first term," Purdy said. "They are showing imagination and initiative in their work."

Purdy said he could not anticipate a lot of things which might develop this year.

"With 50 individuals running around, thinking, who knows what might happen."

sity psychiatrist "for writing crazy exams."

Concern Grows

University officials questioned recently on the use of "dex" on campus acknowledged growing concern with the use of stimulants, and said that future cases would be dealt with more strictly.

During the next few weeks, the student running down a dormitory hall shouting, "Hey anybody got a dex?" will again become a familiar scene. The fact is that if a student really wants one of these pills, he can get one without really trying very hard.

He may have to pay more if controls on the pills are tightened, but for a student on the borderline whose studies have been lagging all semester, a dex can be a very precious thing.

"You have to look at both sides and take the risk."

A lot of students will be taking that risk all across the nation.
