An Ehringhaus Is Not A Home-
But Prints On The Wall Help A Lot

Paintings-

Our Brush Stroke Reproductions are full-color prints, mounted on cardboard, and processed to look like originals. Priced from $1.00 to $3.95.

Drawings

Everybody from Leonardo to Picasso is represented in this lot. Drawings of the Masters prints are of absolutely top quality, and to our mind they are the best buy in the art world. $1.00.

Posters

Bullfight posters, travel posters, Pop Art posters, plus a new line of reproductions of old 19th Century political and theatrical posters—a wonderful splashy colorful spread for screens or walls. Mostly at $1.00.

Prints From Old Books

Here is the loot from many an old book buying trip. Engravings of English country scenes, old color-plates from long-forgotten travel books, old maps, English Political cartoons, all sorts of interesting material from old books that have passed their prime. Prices range from 15c to $2.00.

The Draft And You All Draftees Must Be 'Processed'

Third in a Series
By ELTON FAY
Associated Press Writer

Until today you were a civilian, even though you had signed a paper back home as a draftee or volunteer and been handed an order to report for duty.

But when you stepped down from a bus just now—dressed like most of the others with you in slacks, a sport shirt or pullover sweater and loafer shoes—you crossed the threshold. You were in the military.

Induction, processing and basic training centers are essentially the same whether Army, Navy, Marine or Air Force. They look pretty much alike, have the same purposes. Because the Army's proportion of manpower is the largest, let's use its induction and basic training center at Fort Dix, N. J., as typical.

READY TO ENGULF

Here it is, ready to engulf you.

You go into a building under a sign which says simply "U. S. Army Reception Station." Beneath is another lettered on a pointing arrow, "Report Here." And tacked below that is one more saying "Quiet."

During the coming weeks you are going to do a lot of "reporting here" and a lot of listening while keeping "Quiet."

When you report, whether as a draftee, reservist or volunteer, be sure and have some records with you.

There should be certified copies of your birth certificate as well as those of your family; your marriage certificate, if any, and if either you or your present wife has been married before, records to show death or divorce.

MEET SARGE

A non-commissioned officer, probably a sergeant, meets your arriving group and leads you in.

You are about to become a "private." Or if you are entering the Navy, you'll start out as "seaman recruit," in the Air Force, "airman basic," and in the marines, "private."

A NEW LIFE BEGINS FOR RAW RECRUITS AS THEY ARRIVE AT THE FORT DIX RECEPTION CENTER

Your first image of the Army will be a sergeant. You'll be seeing and hearing from sergeants for a long time.

Almost simultaneously, four things are done to start you off.

You get a first issue of clothing to make you look like a soldier. You get a medical going over which includes a blood test, a tuberculosis test, and an examination of your arms for any tell-tale traces of narcotics needle pricks. You get an Army haircut. They begin "processing" you.

PROCESSING

"Processing" is an in word, man. The military uses it for everything from preparing strategy for waging wars down to asking you who you are, then giving you a label and a number.

You begin by filling out forms about yourself, which provide the foundation for the military record while you are in service—the "201 file," the Army calls it. You also get your dog tag, and the "ID" identification card, with photograph and fingerprints.

Don't think you are singled out because the military sends a copy of your fingerprints to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The FBI also gets them from many other sources.

The primary purpose of the military is to have handy a picture of you and your fingerprints for its own security purposes as well as to help identify you should you be injured, wounded or killed in action. The FBI, which now has more than 170 million records, uses them not only as an aid for itself and other law enforcement agencies, but for the same purpose of identification in event of accident.

QUESTIONNAIRE

The questionnaire includes the usual vital statistics about names and residences of parents and wife; your residences since your 16th birthday or during the past 15 years (whichever is shorter), plus questions (for yes or no answers).
