

Tutorial Program

 School and Northside School. The high schools that participated were Chapel Hill High, Cedar Grove, Elland and Hillsborough Central. There was also some tutoring in the homes. The schools that will be served this year will depend upon the number of tutors that sign up. The program is open to anyone, and usually has Chapel Hill residents and faculty wives, as well as campus students.

Prospective tutors are urged to call Jean Luker at 923-2333, Ann Brownlee at 942-9134, or Ed Williams at 929-5092 or drop in at the Y office.

CHAPEL HILL EXPERIMENTAL TUTORIAL
 Over the summer, a new and different program — Chapel Hill Experimental Tutorial (C.H.E.T.) — was formulated. You have probably seen the displays in the Y, Lenoir Hall and Chase Cafeteria.

C.H.E.T. is a tutorial that seeks to get at what actually goes on in the tutoring situation.

We know from experience and intuition that the basic academic skills of the child are improved. We know, too, that motivation is increased. What we don't know is the causal relationships between the lifting of academic skills the increased motivation and the improved attitudes toward school.

When it can be determined which variables affect which other variables and in what direction, more effective programming can be developed for tutoring.

C.H.E.T. is seeking 80 volunteers to participate in this research and service project. Nothing except normal academic tutoring will be required.

ed of them. No experience is needed and no one will be asked to commit himself for more than three hours per week, at a time convenient for the tutor.

Tutoring in this project will be done in the homes of the kids, all of whom live in Chapel Hill. In addition to undergraduates, graduates and their wives are also invited to become tutors.

The program is being researched by Dave King, a second-year graduate student in sociology. The project director is Phil Clay, a junior sociology major. They along with several other people saw the need for research in this area due to the heavy commitment of time and money.

Youth Educational Services (Y.E.S.) and the Learning Institute of North Carolina (L.I.N.C.) funded the project as part of their concern with the effect of this form of educational service.

Clay emphasizes very strongly that this project offers the service-minded individual an opportunity to serve and to innovate. While tutoring will be academic, the tutor has the opportunity to test his own techniques and to pursue his own interests.

C.H.E.T. is an 8-month experiment from October 10th to May 15th (exclusive of vacations, exam periods and one week preceding exams).

Recruitment is now in progress and applications can be picked up in Lenoir Hall, Chase Cafeteria, and Y-Court, or you may call Phil Clay at 968-9079 or stop by 401 Connor.

 to save many of the old structures in the town.

Mrs. John Foushee told of how she had spent more than 18 months trying to save the 82-year-old Cone house near the old high school on West Franklin Street. The architecture of the old house, formerly known as the Home house, was considered an outstanding example of the Victorian Period, she said.

She had gone to a New England city recently to tour some of the preserved homes there. She returned to Chapel Hill to find that the Cone house had been knocked down and carted away during her absence.

One of Chapel Hill's oldest and most distinguished residents, Mr. Phillips Russell, warned the group what they would be up against in trying to preserve the village.

"People coming into Chapel Hill these days are completely indifferent," he said, "They are not interested in preservation."

Mr. Russell, who came to Chapel Hill as a student in 1900, pointed to a picture hanging above the judge's chair.

"That picture was taken in 1889," he said, "That is almost how Chapel Hill looked when I came here."

The picture, taken from East Franklin Street looking toward the center of town, showed only two distinguishable buildings, the H. H. Patterson building, and across the street from it, the old Patterson Hotel. The hotel has long since been destroyed, and this summer, the Patterson building was destroyed by fire.

After an hour's discussion, the group decided that the time had come for action.

Mr. Robert Snipe, acting as chairman, appointed a steering committee to draw up plans for forming the Chapel Hill Preservation Society. In addition, he appointed an ad-hoc committee to work to save the Presbyterian manse, "one way or another."

The first step has been taken to save some of Chapel Hill's fast disappearing landmarks.

ECC Stalling Medical School Report Release.

GREENVILLE, N. C. (AP)

—A detailed report by three consultants concerning a proposed medical school at East Carolina College will be released to the public Thursday.

Dr. Leo Jenkins, ECC president, said the report would be released at a 10 a.m. news conference on the college campus. At the same time, Jenkins said he would make a statement concerning the report and the controversy surrounding it.

Jenkins told The Associated Press he had delayed release of the report one day "because of the mechanics of the thing. The reports, 100 of them, are being printed and this is the reason we waited until Thursday to make them public."
