

Tide's In; She's Out

GALVESTON, Tex. (UPI)—Chivalry goes with propriety and heroism on the Galveston police force. Officer Jack Dawson found a teenage couple stranded on a jetty by high tide, with waves breaking over the rocks.

He plunged through the surf and when he reached them, did a double take. He quickly stripped off his shirt, handed it to the girl and then led them back to safety.

The girl was wearing a topless bathing suit.

The view from the park bench is tremendous. On and on they come, a seemingly endless stream of pulchritude. The hues are blonde, brunette, occasionally light red. But it doesn't matter.

"... Honestly, I don't know why I accepted the day. I don't even know the guy..." The conversations are as varied as the hairdos. None of it seems to make sense. Yet here they are—that combined species of femalia known as the Carolina Coed. On a sunny autumn afternoon they are all out, or so it seems. Actually, they are out every afternoon, but somehow you don't notice it as much as when bright rays reflect on the crowns of pretty female heads that glisten in the sunlight—Breck girls, no doubt.

"... You've got to see him, Ann. He's just the coolest boy I've ever seen..." Of course, they're here for one thing only: an education. Academic thoughts run through their perceptive little minds. After all, that's what college is for.

Finally your eyes come to rest on one girl walking alone through the Lower Quad, her brown weejuns shuffling through the leaves, and her long straight hair falling wistfully about her lowered head.

Finally, she sits down on the adjacent bench, flopping her books aside carelessly. Your nerve is up; you plunge.

Excuse me, aren't you in my American History class? I know I've seen you somewhere. I could never forget that face."

It's done. Subsequent conversation reveals it was Poli.

Sci., not American History. But that doesn't matter. After a long, repetitive, and surprisingly easy argument, you've managed to persuade her out of studying for a Spanish quiz and you've got the date for tonight. Good going.

"... I swear, I've got to get asked to the football game. I've just got to..." And on it goes. The unceasing stream of coeds continues to pass, carrying with it that incessant chatter that is a part of coediquette.

After all, that's what college is for.

The Draft And You

Pay Low; Benefits High

Sixth in a Series
By ELTON FAY

When you start out as a draftee or enlistee the pay, along with the position, is pretty basic like $94 a month. On the other hand, food, clothing and a place to sleep don't cost you anything. Also, there are fringe benefits you don't get in civilian life. And before you finish active duty you probably will move up to higher grades and pay.

You start out in grade E-1. In the Army, this is a private; in the Navy, a seaman recruit; in the Air Force, an airman, basic, and in the Marines a private.

Assuming that you go in as a draftee and do active duty for two years, you may move up as high as E-5 (with basic monthly pay of $194) although the average seems to be about E-3 ($118).

If you have dependents and are in the lower four grades, the services required a pay-contribution, called basic allowance for quarters (BAQ) when dependents do not live in government-owned or controlled housing.

This is a combined contribution by the serviceman and by his service. For the first four grades, the deduction from monthly pay is $40. The government allotment, to a single dependent is $95.20 for grades E-1 through E-3 (the group in which most new men serve during their first hitch) and $123.10 for E-4. It increases to a top allotment of $145 for three or more dependents of men in any of the four grades.

Among other fringe benefits is a "family separation allowance" to help meet increased household expenses, but this begins only in Grade-4, generally above the category reached in two years by a draftee.

There also are special and incentive pays, including overseas and sea duty, which range from about $8 to $22 per month, and hazardous duty pay (parachute jumping, aircraft carrier flight deck crew duty etc.) adding another $55 for enlisted men. Hostile fire pay (Viet Nam) runs about $65.

Servicemen aren't confronted with doctor's bills. Your wife and children are also eligible for government medical care.

As you start active duty, a $10,000 life insurance policy goes into effect automatically, for which you pay $2 per month, with this deducted from monthly pay. If you don't want this policy you can request it be cut to $5,000, with $1 monthly cost, or cancelled altogether.

If a man on active duty dies or is killed there are income benefits for his survivors derived from the Veterans Administration, Social Security and the service in which he was assigned.

Family benefits are paid by a service in the case of a man dying while on active duty or from causes connected with service when death occurs within 120 days after leaving active duty. These payments usually range from about $800 to $3,000.

However, the chance that you will die while on active duty is small, the probability that you will be going back to a civilian job is high.
