

Carolina Professor Says Viet War End In Sight

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
A University expert in Far East affairs said Wednesday that new peace conditions offered by the Viet Cong may "represent an indication that a turning point in the war is coming."

Dr. Robert Rupen, a political science professor, said the apparent softening of Viet Cong conditions "is potentially important but not decisive."

Rupen said turmoil within Red China, the Sino-Soviet split, and increased military pressure from the United States, may all be combining to give the Hanoi government second thoughts about prolonging the war.

"I see a lessening of Chinese influence in Hanoi," Rupen said, "because for one thing, the North Vietnamese have an intense and historic dislike for the Chinese. For another thing, there is the highly unstable condition inside China. North Viet Nam may be worried by the Red Guard madness."
"Naturally the Russians are taking advantage of this situation to step up their own aid to the north, so the Sino-Soviet split plays a part in the overall picture."

Rupen said the most significant sign of an increased Communist willingness to come in terms may be a recent increase in Viet Cong manpower in South Viet Nam.

Marriage Counselor Obtained For UNC

By KAREN FREEMAN
DTH Staff Writer

After one year of combined efforts, the Student Mental Health Service and the Department of Psychology have succeeded in obtaining UNC's first full-time marriage counselor—Dr. William Eastman.

The need for such a service has been apparent. Undergraduate married students comprise approximately 13 percent of total undergraduate enrollment here, but in the past three years their usage of the Student Mental Health Service has doubled that of any other group.

Prevention of crises that bring students to the Mental Health Service is one of Dr. Eastman's major areas of concern. He hopes to accomplish this by "helping people deal with problem situations and more clearly define their positions for themselves."

Dr. Eastman has worked on four degrees himself while married.

He received his B.S. in Education from Rutgers University, his B.D. from Yale, his M.S. from the University of Pennsylvania, where he also received his Ed.D. and his M.S.W. from the University of Maryland.

His work will not be limited to married students, however. He also expects to do premarital counseling, and is planning to organize groups for engaged students.

In cooperation with the Dean of Women's Office, Dr. Eastman will have spoken at all freshman women's dorms within the month. He conducted groups at Spencer Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week, and expects to finish the program at the Nurses' Dorm on October 25 and 26.

Dr. Eastman is available to speak to any other group

The Hanoi government, he said, "just can't feed the number of troops it now has in the South. I think what they may be doing is sending more troops there in the hope that it will strengthen their position at the bargaining table."
Rupen said the United States should maintain its military pressure for the time being.

upon request, and is scheduled to speak at Avery tonight.

The main topic to be discussed at these meetings will be men-women relationships before and during marriage, and Dr. Eastman will attempt to clarify students' ideas in this area.

In describing what he considers his purpose here to be, Dr. Eastman said, "I'm not here to umpire disputes or to make decisions for people. I believe in people making their own decisions. My purpose is to help students explore different possibilities and decide what they want to do."

Dr. Eastman's counseling service will include students referred by the Student Mental Health Service, house-mothers, graduate counselors, and the Dean of Student Affairs Office—in addition to students seeking help on an individual basis.

Although records will be kept, they will be confidential, in an effort to encourage those students who "might be apprehensive" to seek help.

A project has already been begun among married students. All of them were given lengthy questionnaires during Orientation to complete. As the first effort to glean complete information about the problems of married students at Carolina, the results should help Dr. Eastman determine "how best we can use the manpower we've got" in alleviating married students' needs.

"We can anticipate that younger marriages face obvious difficulties in terms of life experience and maturity," said Eastman.

He theorizes that most difficulties arise from the triple pressures of being married, being young, and still being subjected to the demands of attending school.

TICKETS for the Four Tops concert Saturday night at 8 p.m. in Carmichael Auditorium are still being sold to students at the GM information desk for 75 cents. Tickets at the door will cost the general admission price of $1.50.

White Students Integrate PS 20

NEW YORK (AP) — Every week day, 40 Brooklyn white children leave their middle-class homes for an hour's bus ride into a poor, predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican area. There, they go to school. It is called "reverse open enrollment" — white children being bused to a Negro and Puerto Rican school — and the white parents are thrilled to see their children go.

In fact, it was their idea. The experiment began at the peak of the national furor over proposal to bus Negro pupils to white schools. It was widely predicted then that reverse open enrollment would not last three weeks.

It has lasted three years, and those involved count it a smashing success.

"These white parents have very strong convictions about integration," said Carl V. Warren, principal at Public School 20 where the program is in effect.

"Three years ago they decided they wanted their children in a Negro school and they fought until they got them in. I'm glad they came here."

P. S. 20, in Brooklyn's Fort Greene section, was not the parents' first choice. They originally picked P. S. 21, an all-Negro school in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section.

"They (the white parents) even staged a sit-in over there," Warren recalled. "When I heard about it, I invited them to come to my school. We already had a few whites here and I feel that you should never send children — white or Negro — into schools where they suddenly become unique, as these white children would have in a school where no whites had ever been."

The Board of Education shares enthusiasm over the program with Warren, the white parents and the pupils of P. S. 20.

"We're delighted that this program has moved well," said Frederick H. Williams, the board's assistant superintendent in charge of integration. "Integrated education is good for all children, and these parents realized it."

One of those parents is Mrs. George Kapp, whose daughter Edna, now 10, has been attending P. S. 20 since the reverse open enrollment experiment began.

Mrs. Kapp called it "a very healthy, worthwhile experience."

"When we first began," she said, "there were rumors that we might not be welcome. Some people thought we were mad — and told us so. But it turned out just fine. There have been no problems at all."

This year, there are 40 children in the program. The first year there were 32 and last year 43.

Warren said several new pupils come into the program each year and several are lost "because their families move or because they finish elementary school."

"We have lost none because of racial difficulties," he said.

"Successful? I'd say that just the fact that the bused children are coming for a third year means something. But I don't like to talk about success because in terms of numbers, this program really is insignificant."

are fighting on the ground they should receive strategic support in the air."

Nixon said he expected Republicans to gain at least 40 seats in the U. S. House in the 1966 election because "the Johnson policies are catching up."

"Johnson's coat tails," he said, "are pulling his supporters down instead of along. The President's popularity will continue to slide."

Nixon said the North Carolina anti-poverty program is the first in promises and press releases, but last in progress.

"The Johnson administration" he said, "is putting politics first and profiting from the poor."
