Cow Pasture Rally

 The theme of the day, if one could be distinguished, seemed to be "the turning tide by white American voters in electing patriotic candidates who will oppose the Great So-
 The name most frequently mentioned and most wildly cheered was that of Lester Maddox.
 To one side of the speaker's platform, a Klansman was selling posters which pictured a Klansman astride a black horse and surrounded by flames.

 The speakers came and went. All the big names: Craig, Thompson, Hudkins, Dorsett.
 Just after Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton had been introduced as "your Lordship," the inevitable "incident" took place.
 One of the "Security guards" had spotted a "beard." He wasted no time calling his captain via walkie-talkie to announce the find.
 The captain, upon receiving the call, immediately displayed his capability to make a quick decision under pressure. "Close in on him, Lieutenant," he ordered.
 By that time some 30 "guards" had moved in to surround what turned out to be two "beards," and one girl.
 Gradually the guards pushed in closer, snickering and harrasing the three. "Get them out of here," the crowd yelled.
 And then — while the white, Christian, Protestant, recently naturalized, patriotic Americans rose in unison and yelled, "White niggers get out!" — the three were shoved to the barbed wire fence and over it, by the "security guards."
 Before the end of Jones' speech, night had come. Torches were lit and a procession of robed Klans people filed down the hill and circled around a fifty-foot cross.

 ert Jones, wife of North Carolina's Grand Dragon.
 Robed and hooded, Mrs. Jones told the women in the audience: "Ladies, it's time you took stock of your husband and saw what side of the fence he's on."
 "And if he's on the side of the NAACP, I'd buy him a ticket to Russia and get me a quick divorce — even if I had to go to Reno."
 Mrs. Jones' husband was the last speaker at the rally, following Dorsett to the microphone.
 Dorsett told the rally that police protection of Civil Rights demonstrators was responsible for much of today's racial trouble.

 "But the moment they're treated like the Klan, the moment they're treated likeus, they'll stop that foolishness."
 "We can't riot in any city," Dorsett said. "We can't even walk in a city unless we get a permit."
 "Tell it like it is," somebody shouted.
 And then J. Robert Jones, North Carolina's highest ranking Klansman, spoke.
 "The KKK is here to stay," Jones said, "and there's no two ways about it."
