By responding to an adver-tisement placed by Pan Am last spring, she became UNC's University and UNC at spring. Greensboro, for the second year.

Besides developing a taste for the caviar served on firstclass flights and the stores of Manhatten, 21-year-old Mar- 11 garet found the cultural opportunities made available by the job very helpful to a senior art-education major.

By visiting the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the Tate Gallery in London, "I was able to view many paintings that otherwise it would have been impossible for me to have seen."

She stayed with other stewardesses in downtown hotels in every city she visited, and was able to attend many plays and concerts - especially in London, which she visited frequently.

As a change from the city, however, the airline arranged for her to stay at the famed Turnberry Lodge in rural Scotland, a favorite golfing resort of President Eisenhow-

Margaret found her passengers, to be quite friendlyat times, a little too sociable. On a particularly sociable flight back from London, the stewardesses had to have the captain announce that they were entering an area of turbulence and that the passengers would have to take their seats and fasten their seat belts, just to keep them immobile long enough for the
