

Harry Is Gone But Harry's Still There

Harry's gone. But Harry's is still here. Ralph is running it now, though. Harry Maklin, the moon-faced proprietor of the delicatessen next door to the Post Office, and his wife, Sybil, retired this week, leaving for Miami Beach.

But Harry's — which will always be Harry's even if Harry is in Miami Beach — is staying in the family.

Ralph Maklin, who is Harry's Number One son, and his wife, Sandy, have taken command and say they'll keep things the way they are:

"We'll still kick out bare-footers," Ralph said. "And we'll keep the name Harry's."

And of course, the waiters will stay just like they've always been — the most individualistic ones in town.

Harry's first came to Chapel Hill in 1926 when Harry Stern, who is Harry Maklin's brother-in-law, opened it next door to the present Robbin's Store.

A year or two later, Harry's moved to where the Youth Center is now — next to the Carolina Theater.

Harry Maklin bought the restaurant in 1939 and managed it for five years, selling out in 1944 and moving to New York and then Baltimore.

A decade later, he returned, bought back Harry's and moved it to where The Fireside is now. In January of 1960, he moved it to where it is now.

And even though he's retired now, Harry will return again.

He and Sybil are coming back this summer to manage Harry's while Ralph and Sandy take a vacation.

THAT MAN HARRY, here found musing by his cherished cash register, is now gone into the happy state of retirement. But courage! Harry-lovers, Ralph is there, and Harry's will never be Ralph's. And you've still gotta wear shoes to get in.

Godwin Wants Broader Auto Inspection Law

PINEHURST (AP)—A. Pils-ton Godwin, commissioner of North Carolina's Motor Vehicle Department, Tuesday called for a broader auto inspection law and a more efficient liability insurance statute.

Godwin spoke first Tuesday at a civic club meeting in Hamlet, then at an insurance agents meeting in Pinehurst. He told the Pinehurst session that "strengthening of the state's financial responsibility act is an important part of the traffic safety legislation enacted by the 1965 General Assembly."

Godwin said that drivers' licenses are being suspended at a rate of 400 to 1,000 a day for failure to comply with the law.

In North Carolina, all motorists must have liability insurance. If they fail to do so, their driver's licenses are automatically suspended.

The biggest problem, Godwin said, "is the public's reluctance to act promptly."

But, he noted, "There are too many incidents involving insurance agents who were careless or dishonest in the handling of important auto matters."

Club To Buy Plane

The Chapel Hill Flying club will purchase a new $6,000

twin-seater plane in the near future.

At its last meeting the club voted to purchase a Chapion Citabria, equipped for acrobatic and instrument flying.

The 105 horsepower plane will feature stick controls rather than the conventional control wheel found on most smaller aircraft.

The Flying Club is a non-profit University organization which offers complete flight training to interested students.

Dr. Don Johnson of the School of Public Health serves as advisor and flight instructor for the organization.

The club currently uses an Aeronca Chief which will be used as a trade in on the new aircraft. The club offers free demonstration flights to prospective members.

Arrangements for demonstration flights can be made by calling Johnson at 966-1171.

Congress Votes To Give LBJ Guard Call-up Power

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congress voted today to give President Johnson the authority to call to active duty without declaring a national emergency the country's nearly two million reservists and national guardsmen.

The President did not ask for the authority contained in a compromise $58,067,472,000 appropriations bill which will finance most defense outlays, including the Viet Nam war costs, for the 12 months which began July 1.

Prison, System Bad Director Says

CHARLOTTE (AP)—North Carolina Prisons Director Lee Bounds asserted Tuesday night North Carolina has a "very bad prison system."

Bounds made the statement in a filmed television program which was prepared and shown Tuesday night by Charlotte Station WBTB.

He stressed the need for community responsibility in the matter of rehabilitation.

Bounds said that one answer to the problem of how to improve conditions is the single-cell system. He said he would ask the North Carolina General Assembly for more than $12 million with which to build three 500-man facilities equipped with individual cells.

Bounds declared, "There is no useful purpose in denying that within these 50-man dormitories in the field unit system at night — the inmates have control — not us."

"There are attacks, sexual attacks and other attacks, strong-arm methods for exacting from a weaker inmate payments of various kinds to the predatory inmates and we can't do anything about it at present."

"There is a climate of fear, frankly, that makes it at the moment impractical for us to order custodial officers onto the 50-man dormitories where medium custody or close custody inmates are confined."

"Custody only was to be provided. To acquire personnel for rehabilitation, to develop and operate correctional programs in our system would take more money than we're likely to get from the General Assembly if we take that route of providing our own personnel for this purpose."

"I think it would be a futile effort to seek that amount of money and I don't intend to try."

"My efforts, instead, are going to be directed at the

The Chief Executive lacks the power to activate reservists now unless he declares a state of national emergency. The new authority will extend to June 30 but Johnson is not expected to use it under present conditions.

The compromise empowers the President to call up entire units of the Ready Reserve or National Guard, as well as individuals not assigned to units who have not served at least 24 months on active duty and have not fulfilled reserve military requirements.

Unassigned reservists could be required to serve a total of 24 months, less any time served on active duty or in active duty training. Entire units also could be required to serve on active duty for 24 months.

Chairman George H. Mahon, D-Tex., of the House Appropriations Committee said the language in the measure does not suggest that the President can take any action with regard to using reserves to beef up forces in Viet Nam. It simply gives him authority, he said.

Rep. Robert L. F. Sikes, D-Fla., told the House the call-up authority would not be abused but should be available if needed while Congress is in adjournment.

"We have to trust somebody," Sikes said.

Sen. Richard Russell, D-Ga., told the Senate, however, "I hope the President will see fit to make use of this authority."

Mahon also said Senate leaders had given "solemn assurance" that they would seek agreement early next year on separate legislation defining the status and strength of reserve components.

The House recently passed such legislation but the Senate did not consider it. Instead, the Senate put the reserve provision in the appropriations bill.
