

UNC's Attorney Generals: What They're Like

Tall, Red-Haired Coed Takes Work Seriously

By DIANE WARMAN
DTH Staff Writer

The Women's Attorney General is a tall red-head with an accent straight from Old Virginia.

But the honeysuckle-and-Old-South stops when the job takes over. The lady takes her work seriously.

Susan Diane Ricks, Women's Attorney General, has held that office since she was appointed last May by the president of the student body. The position is not an elective office. It is awarded on the basis of experience.

Originally from Jarrett, Va., Diane was a junior transfer from St. Mary's, where she had been president of the student body and chairman of the honor council.

She became interested in the Attorney General's office and joined the staff last year because it gave her a chance to work with people.

Diane defines her job as being, "to work on behalf of the women students in maintaining the standards of honor and dignity."

Defining herself as definitely a social person, she is a member of the Young Democrats Club and is chapter correspondent for Chi Omega Sorority. She also is a former member of a musical group known as the "Cold Cuts."

Her summer activities have been varied: a summer studying art at the University of Hawaii, a European tour, and, last summer, a part-time job in a law firm in Wilmington, Delaware.

She is a child psychology major and hopes to work in a children's hospital in Virginia after graduation.

Although she did not personally work on the new rules-change here, she enthusiastically promotes them.

Asked what other changes she would like to see, she declined to name specifics, but said instead, "I would promote any change the students wanted, as long as it is a valid and acceptable change; I would not stand in the way as an officer."

A profound sense of responsibility is perhaps the predominant characteristic of the present Women's Attorney General. She speaks seriously about her job:

"I believe firmly in the students and the student body. I don't consider this an administrative office. It is a student office, and I am here on behalf of the women students, but, at the same time, I respect the role of the administration and faculty."

The lady takes her work seriously.

Hodges: 'I'm Ambitious — To Point Of Egotism'

By DIANE WARMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Men's Attorney General Frank Hodges leaned back, lighted a cigarette, and grinned.

"Like most people in student government, I'm ambitious — to the point of egotism. I think that most people who set themselves up for a public office are essentially egotistical."

Hodges, a 21-year-old senior from Charlotte, was a member of the Honor Council during his freshman year.

"Needless to say, as a freshman, I didn't offer any great decisions, but I did gain some good experience."

Having early learned to live with the feeling of "wearing the big black hat on campus," he sees his present position as being primarily administrative over a total staff of from 70-80 people.

"I also attend the endless meetings where the office of Attorney General needs to be represented—some of them are terribly superfluous, by the way."

Possessing a droll, dry sense of humor and a figure of the variety which is usually referred to as "solid," Hodges laughed when asked about possible future plans.

"Do you mean 'What am I going to do when I'm big?' Well, let's hope for a mental maturity and not some sort of physical development."

A political science major, Frank plans to go on to law school after graduation.

"I'm presently interested in the underdog. I'd like ultimately to be involved in some sort of civil libertarian form of law, perhaps with the NAACP or the American Civil Liberties Union."

He also expressed a definite interest in state politics.

Among some of his other, ing my administration, the activation of a Defense Council will be realized. I think even the most obviously guilty person has the right to a strong defense."

Hodges sees failure to identify as being one of the major problems facing today's student. A second problem he named was tremendous academic pressure and competition, for which there is no ready solution.

Why did Frank Hodges accept the position of Attorney General? "I have a strong belief in the Honor System. Since I came into the office, my criticism is greater, and my support is greater."

Frank Hodges

... 'I'm Ambitious'

not-so-erudite interests, Frank listed "partying, the Carolina Grill on Thursday nights and reading (but not westerns, science fiction or James Bond)."

The present Attorney General expressed a deep belief in the Honor System, feeling that it gives many students their first opportunity to be honorable.

Hodges does not feel that the essence of the Code should be changed. "I don't think gentlemanly or ladylike behavior can be defined."

However, I'd like for our own system to adopt some more legalistic methods. Dur-
