on human interest. "Mr. Joe loved people and got along with all types of folks," the author explained. "His whole career was a testimonial to his rank as a great human being with a firstclass temperament. I've simply tried to present the man as he was." Morrison's interest in Josephus Daniels was stimulated years ago.

MOST PROMINENT "As I investigated history, politics and the press, I gradually came to realize that among North Carolinians who staved in the state, yet were prominent on the national scene, Josephus Daniels was the single most important individual the state had produced. Long before I entered graduate school or decided to write a book, I picked him as my subject."

Morrison cited Daniels' key positions in the administrations of three American pres-

Though Daniels completed a five-volume autobiography before his death, Morrison felt there were some stories that needed to be verified and some "gaps" in the record that needed to be filled in.

FILLS GAPS

He believes his book helps fill some of the "gaps" in the record. In addition, he has uncovered some facts hitherto unknown by even some members of Daniels' immediate family.

For example, letters written by young Daniels to his mother disclosed that he was once engaged to another woman named Addie, prior to the time he met Addie Worth Bagley, his wife of 55 years. The earlier romance was with a Wilson school teacher, Addie Marsh.

Plowing through early editions of the News and Observer, Morrison discovered Daniels was the first person to go on record in print as favoring a Consolidated University of North Carolina.

The Feb. 14, 1919, edition of the paper quoted Daniels as suggesting that North Carolina establish a Consolidated University "composed of Chapel Hill, State College at Raleigh, Woman's College in Greensboro and the teachers' colleges at Boone and Greenville." He pioneered the idea in a guest appearance before a joint session of the General Assembly while he was Navy Secretary.

After years of study and research, Morrison believes his book's title, "Small-d Democrat," best sums up Josephus Daniels as a person,

"Though he was a 'capital-D Democrat' in the life of his state and nation, he was a 'small-d Democrat' in his relationships with people," the author explained.

"Josephus Daniels was for equal rights for all and special privileges for none. He used the same tone of voice for the janitor as for the governor or president. He never lost the common touch."

A Bit Of Uncertainty Spices Science Show

By MIRIAM HENKEL James E. Wadsworth may not be a showman, but he can tell you that the show must go on.

And he's never surprise dat the things that try to keep WUNC-TV' "Science and Nature" from going on.

One guest from the UNC School of Pharmacy unintentionally brought his own firstaid victim to the show. He was discussing fainting when he happened to glance at the high school girl who was assisting his demonstration.

"I believe Sue looks a little faint now," he said.

Cameramen had enough presence of mind to switch to scenes other than Sue's fainting. She did faint, but returned later to finish the show. "You never know what's going to happen," Wadsworth

The show was Wadsworth's brain child back when WUNC-TV was still in diapers, too.

Despite emergencies which may, and often do, arise, "Science and Nature" has gone on the air at 2 p.m. every Wednesday for twelve years, a total of 384 tele-

"The show is informal; we don't want a lecture. The truth of it is, it's all spontaneous and unrehearsed. I think that adds spice," Wads-worth says, somewhat like a proud papa.

This informality, Wadsworth feels, is the key to the show's twelve-year success.

Wadsworth has been director of the UNC Housing Office since it was formed 21 years ago and has been a frequent lecturer at Morehead Plane-

His background in radio and television study and as a science teacher in Durham, Chapel Hill and Hope Vally High Schools makes him an ideal moderator for the show.

"All of them have been good," Wadsworth says of his student assistants. Research Triangle Institute and Morehead Planetarium participate in the programs which run during the school year, about 30-35 programs per year.
