'You Can't Take It With You' Monday, because 'You Can't Take It With You' doesn't open until Wednesday. our Playmaker observer in-

Volume 74. Number 66

CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1966

Founded February 23, 1893

'Would You Believe Santa Has A Chimney Stretcher?'

By STEVE LAIL

Special to the DTH For eleven and a half months each year I laugh pretty much like any other University student.

change the way I laugh as well as the way I look.

My usual chuckle becomes "ho ho ho" and my sallow complexion turns red, white and jolly. From now until Christmas morning I'll be a collegiate Santa

I've been playing the jolly role for the past four years, and I guess I am a professional since I often get paid for my

What is it like playing Santa Claus? It's like walking a tight rope. You perform before the most critical yet Hickory. wonderful people. Also, you are the world's greatest guy - even if it hurts. But just one slip can kill you.

Both my jolly, bald - headed father. who was the first Kris Kringle I ever saw, and I agree that kindergarten-age children. Santa bought them off with a children are the greatest to play for. When they come face to face with Santa Claus it's their finest hour. They look him over good but don't seem to mind that he has brown eyebrows, and But for two weeks before Christmas 1 a white beard, or a sallow complexion when he should have rosy cheeks.

They love the old fellow too much to care about flaws in his makeup. They speak to St. Nick as though they were grown-ups confiding in a psychiatrist.

The tight rope act comes in many forms such as when some of these little "darlings" turn on you. I walked the "rope" two years ago before transferring to the University to study journalism. It was at my fraternity's Christmas party for the faculty's children at Lenoir Rhyne College in my hometown

Some Chinese twins, holding hands, approached me. The self - appointed spokesman informed me that neither believed in Santa Claus and hinted of spreading the bad word to the other double ration of goodies, and his identity was saved.

Then there's the times when the department store Santa Claus gets himself into a fix, like the time I made my biggest goof. It happened in Spainhour's store in Hickory. I was getting along fine with the little ones until a little blonde miss plopped down on my lap. I asked her, "Won't you tell old Santa where you got that all - day sucker?

She innocently replied, "You just gave it to me over at Belk's store." That wasn't the only time I faced embarrassment. One year at a kindergarten party the teacher asked Santa (me) to lead the kiddies in "Up On the House Top." Suddenly I felt like a Miss America contestant who'd just been asked the $64,000 question. I couldn't remember the words, but thank goodness they all settled for "Jingle Bells."

Another thing, Art Linkletter was right in saying that kids say the darndest things. Too, they ask the darndest questions - for which they get the darn-

One youngster asked, "You're too fat to get down our chimney. What are you going to do?"

"Would you believe Santa Claus has a chimney stretcher?" I answered. Another time a child asked me where Rudolph stayed while I was in the store. In return I gave the stock reply, "Rudolph is eating his dinner up on the roof-

There was one time though when I had the upperhand on a young Hickory couple. They didn't realize that I was a former schoolmate of theirs because they didn't recognize me. The couple just couldn't get their daughter to talk to me. So I asked her if "daddy" still delivered milk and like to raise "puppy dogs." The child responded superbly and the parents were stupified. From that day until this they probably have wondered if perchance the fat man who held their daughter on his lap wasn't the real Santa Claus.

Contrary to how it may appear, playing Santa Claus is not all one big laugh and ho-ho-ho after another. Often Santa is exposed to a sad, yet real, side of life.

Such was the case at the party from some underprivileged children. A lean eight year-old whose trousers were obviously handed down from a much bigger boy took his turn talking to me. He mumbled a few words and then handed me this letter:

Dear Santa Claus.

Mama says there ain't no Santa Claus. Me and my sisters believe there is one. We don't want any toys much. We just want our daddy to come home. Mama cries a lot at night because we don't have much money. If you know where our daddy is please tell him we love him and to come home. We love you too Santa Claus.

> Merry Christmas. Jake Age 8

Something like this is heartbreaking This is just one case of how pitiful it is when these needy children speak to Santa Claus. Deep down they know that this Christmas won't be any better than the last one. It's times like these I don't mind at all playing for free and wish I could do more.

No matter though, rich or poor, shy or rascally, children are the happiest when they hear Jolly Old Saint Nicholas say he loves all the good little boys and girls and wants them to mind their par-

Likewise I've come to be so absorbed in bouncing these children on my knee that I wish I could go to their homes on Christmas eve and shimy right down their chimneys as in the famous Christ-

Furthermore it would do everyone a lot of good to be a Santa Claus even without putting on the suit and whiskers. And remember - watch out, don't pout and you'll have company Christmas eve from either a 22-year-old student or the real fat guy.

Merry Christmas!

Christmas Comes Early For Youth

WEST CHESTER, Pa. (AP) setts for a few days. - Today is Christmas for 5year-old Lance Cummings, be- he would come see me" Mrs. cause he is bedridden with in- Cummings said the frail child curable cancer and his numbered days may not include Dec. 25.

"We're having his Christmas party early just in case," Lance's mother, Mrs. Walter Cummings of nearby Dowingtown, Pa., said yesterday.

"The doctors can't say how long he'll live," she said. "I guess they're surprised he's lasted this long." "It's getting harder though," she said. "I can see him wasting away, fighting to be cheerful. "He tells me, 'I won't cry mommy, if you won't." It's hard not to." She said he was upset when his father, a truck driver, had to make a trip to Massachu-

College Girls Involved In Hubby Quest

"Large numbers of college women are actively searching for husbands during their years on campus, a fact evidenced by half of all U. S. women being married by age

That's what Dr. William F. Eastman, assistant professor of hear, or think, or see is a litmarriage counseling at UNC, tle boy dying by inches. told a group of housemothers and graduate counselors at the third meeting of the In-Service Training Program sponsored by the Dean of Women's Office.

Housemothers and counselors have more potential influence on a coed's solving her love - life problems than her own parents, said Dr. East-

"You are in a pivotal point, living with these girls day to day," he said. "The difficulty comes when girls don't ask for help. This is sometimes due to a lack of a personal relationship between you and the girls."

A panel discussion followed Dr. Eastman's talk and the viewing of "A Charming Couple," a film on a college marriage that failed.

A graduate counselor pointed out that most problems college women have after marriage result from the "isolated anyone not contacted in his environment of the university."

"It doesn't allow the couple to see themselves in less idealistic circumstances, and coeds find it difficult for that reason to draw the line between real love and romantic love," she said. Dr. Eastman cited novels and television portrayals of marriage as another source of confusion about love. He encouraged the housemothers to communicate with coeds and set up a working relationship with them. Dr. Eastman joined the University Medical School Psychiatric Department this year, the of the Carnival and Lent." where he has been working in teaching research and serving in the psychiatric clinic of the Student Health Service.

"Daddy doesn't love me or told her. "I explained he was away on his job, and he felt better,"

About Sunday's Christmas party at a friend's house, Mrs. Cummings said she told her other five children:

"Someday Lance will go to sleep and never wake up again. So, this is his party. They pretty well understand why we're doing this."

"He came home for Thanksgiving dinner for about six hours," Mrs. Cummings says. She said his happiness was reflected on the Medical chart. He improved a little after returning to the hospital.

Although he has not been told of the seriousness of his condition, Mrs. Cummings feels the youngster has an

"During the past two weeks he hasn't let us kiss him on the lips. He insists we kiss him on the cheek," she said.

Mrs. Cummings says that the illness has left them in dire financial straits. Their hospitalization has run out. The Moose Lodge in Downingtown has started a drive to collect funds and has received a total of $60 thus far.

The mother and father, however, haven't time to think about money. All they can Festival Fund Push Beginning

Solicitation of funds for the 1967 Fine Arts Festival will begin in men's and women's residence halls tonight.

Festival Treasurer Don Ubell, who is directing solicitations, hopes that all residents will give 50 cents each. If a residence hall gives an average of 50 cents or more per resident, it will be listed as a Festival patron, he added.

Solicitors for the Festival will carry certification sheets signed by Ubell and Assistant Dean of Men Robert Kepner. Solicitation will be held in Y-Court on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 2 to 4:30 p.m. to receive donations from residence unit. The bulk of Festival funds will be used for the Merce Cunningham modern dance company and for honoraria for mittee organized and led the artists and speakers. Much will also pay for travel, publicity, printing, housing and

The Festival, which will be held here from April 9 through the Women's Affairs Commit-13. will feature the Cunning- tee, says that the biggest misham Company, the Buffalo take being made at UNC is Philharmonic Orchestra, the letting the men try to change National Student Graphic Arts the rules. "The Dean of Wom-Show, a leading American en is the person who has to be poet, a noted critic and the influenced and she is more Playmaker play - "The Bat- likely to be influenced by wom-

The slogan for the Festival, which is UNC's second, is "Interchange: the University and

Y-COURT WAS transformed this weekend into a Together they are the International Bazaar. multitude of things: a "Crossroads Cafe," a children's shop, a nick-nack shop, and more.

For more, see page six. -DTH Photo by Mike McGowan

Coed Closing Hour Changes Suggested In UMass Trip

Coeds Must Work

For All Changes

Should University of Massachusetts rules for women be adopted at UNC?

Each woman student there sets her own curfew. This "self imposed curfew" system replaced the set time system at UMass last year. The women now decide what time would be best for them to return to the dorm. There is no check out or check in. Women's staff at UMass, says responsible enough to be withthat the new system works better than the old one. "There is a greater sense of responsibility and a greater academic atmosphere. There has been no increase in promiscuity." Governor of Morehead College Dwight Allen, who was assigned to study this change at the recent Amherst Conference on UMass's residence college system, said, "The administration explained the change noting the contrast between the liberal education in the classroom and the strict

"The university had to restate its aims in regards to public. They had to say 'We're ties." here to give a liberal educanursemaid to women stuconvent - like atmosphere of dents.' " The Women's Affairs Commovement for self - imposed curfew. The coeds brought about the change entirely by themselves.

Susan Higgins, a member of en." Miss Sargent agrees with this and thinks that the women students at Carolina are too

Disparity Seen In Coed Wishes

By LINDA ANN SMITH Special to the DTH

A recent survey asked coeds what they think of Carolina's doing away with closing hours for women.

And responses differed wide-

The most often stated reasons for keeping definite closing hours were: closing hours are convenient for girls stuck with bad dates, having closing hours is more conducive to Miss Alice Sargent, Dean of study, and college girls are not out restrictions. Reasons given in favor of no closing hours included: most girls would probably come in earlier if they could impose their own curfew, girls twentyone years old should be responsible for themselves, and closing hours limit the time girls have for fun.

When coeds were asked "What do you think of Carolina's doing away with closing hours for women," some replies were:

"I think it would be a gross

"It's ridiculous!" "Not a thing. College women with no supervision at all go completely ape. Without any supervision, I'd go completely ape."

"I think it'd be fine. If you don't have sense enough to come in, rules aren't going to help you. Girls our age are out working and don't have curfews. Such rules keep college girls behind the times. "That's the most archaic old problem of money-how sion has recommended changes much to spend and whereis the major issue facing the in the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees." A three - judge federal court criticized the legislature for Perhaps no legislature in recent years has been confronted with more problems Other maior issues include congressional redistricting, clarification of the early this year . state's lqiuor laws and improvement of education.

Continued On Page 6

Almost certain to come up are proposals to abolish the death penalty, strengthen the auto inspection program, put North Carolina on daylight saving time, increase the State Highway Patrol and gain university status for East Carolina College

1967 General Assembly

"It's going to be a long, rough session," Sen. Ralph Scott of Alamance predicted whether we've got too much

"The problem of money, or too little, will be a big issue" said veteran Sen. Dallas Alford of Nash.

They were among Tar Heel lawmakers attending the closing session Saturday of a prelegislative orientation conference at the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. Gov. Dan Moore said he will propose a "general and broad tax reduction" to the legislature which convenes early in February. But he has not spelled out the details. The general fund surplus available to the 1967 legislature has mounted to a figure estimated at from $150 million to $200 million. Sen. Scott said, "I had rather see the state have additional services instead of giving the money back to the taxpavers.' Rep. Britt of Robeson, in line for the House speakership, said money is the No. 1 problem. Then he listed in order: congressional redistricting. clarification of the liquor laws and higher education.

"There are two apparent

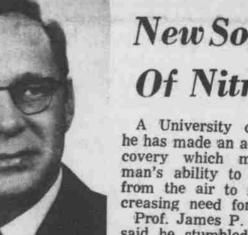

Facing Legislators By The Associated Press problems under higher educa- 2nd District is under-populatveral North Carolina legis- tion," Britt explained. "East ed," Britt said. "The court Carolina College is seeking uni- also said the districts are not versity status and a commis- as compact as they should be.' The state Supreme Court laters agreed Saturday the age-

its job of congressional redistricting in a special session

Money Big Problem

"The court said the 7th Disonly in one's home. trict is over-populated and the

Dr. Rudolph Kremer

Organ Recital Occurs Tonight

Dr. Rudolph Kremer, UNC profesor of music will play a dedicatory recital on the Baroque organ recently installed in the Chapel of The Wesley Foundation tonight at 8.

Following a brief litany of Thanksgiving at the beginning of the dedication, Dr. Kremer will play three pieces by J.S. Bach: Fantasy and Fugue in G Minor, Two Chorale Preludes, and the Fugue in G

Prof Finds New Source Of Nitrogen

added to the Legislature's work by ruling this week that the taking liquor to restaurants and clubs - is illegal. The court said liquor may be consumed legally in wet counties practice of brown-bagging -

A University chemist says he has made an accidental discovery which may lead to man's ability to get nitrogen from the air to meet the in-creasing need for fertilizer.

Prof. James P. Collman, 34, said he stumbled on the discovery while doing basic research on a new class of organic compounds while working under a grant from the National Science Foundation. Collman said he found two compounds in which molecular nitrogen is bound to a metal ion derived from the element iridium. These were the first compounds known to contain molecular nitrogen. Nitrogen can be derived from the air, he said, by forcing their nitrogen for more nitrogen from the air. Chemists in the past have tried to combine nitrogen from the air with other elements to form useful materials. They have failed because of the inertness of atmospheric nitro-

these compounds to give up

Discovery of the compounds containing molecular nitrogen, said Collman, opens the door to the possibility that this reaction can be accomplished.

'Tree Grows In Brooklyn' Author Reflects

By LEE SHERRILL Special to the DTH

"College students today seem very different. You know how they dress - we used to get all dressed up to go to women students to satisfy the school, the boys in suits and Betty Smith, who wrote "A tion. We will no longer play Tree Grows in Brooklyn." talked softly with a Brooklynflavored accent as she struggled to hold down her frisky English sheep dog, Noname.

"And we fought for our education. We never opened our mouths to a professor. We took what he sad as law. But in a class I taught here, a boy sat back with his feet propped up on the desk. When I told him to change what he had written, he said he liked it the way it

"I just can't believe the difference."

Miss Smith audited several courses in playwrighting at for the first time in school, On the mantel is a gold tro-Yale and UNC as a special stu- and looking at the word saw phy. Miss Smith typically dent. She taught later at both large, well - furnished house and has a black Cadillac con- and had to go home." vertible. But things weren't always so prosperous.

She once lived with her two children in a one-room apart- for word - just to know what ment on Hillsborough Street. She remembers walking into a bank and asking for a loan of three dollars "so I wouldn't self at the age of 14. "I loved ey in the bank. Of course they They sent her a dollar and didn't give me the money." That was after she had sent the manuscript of "A Tree ed." Grows in Brooklyn" to Harp-waiting for a reaction. rich and famous. "I didn't think it was that and boxes and boxes of let-good," she insists. What first inspired her to Does she answer them all? write? "I always loved words. "Yes, I try to, but it takes so When I learned the word "cat" long. a real creature moving, some- brushes it aside with, "One of thing went 'bang' inside of the Presidents gave it to me. Miss Smith, at 62, lives in a me.

"I got so excited I got sick She loved to write anything and everything. "I sat and copied books word it would feel like to write a to read them." Now she says with a laugh, At the age of 12 she sent a "I didn't even have any mon- short poem to a newspaper.

She even wrote letters to her-printed it. "From then on, I was hook-

Her study is full of momener's Publishing Co. and was toes - shelves lined with different editions of her works, The book attracted world- (in several languages), all her wide attention and made her original manuscripts, paper clippings of critics' reviews ters.

I don't remember which one."

Author Betty Smith