

"What is it?" This seemed to be the question on everybody's mind as they entered Y-Court today. What it was was the International Bazaar. Everything was different, from the cashier's desk, which was a concession stand with a pretty blonde, to the offices, which were places to buy miscellany. Nearly everything was there, all with the international flavor, or course. On the first floor were sculpture shops; above was a nick-nack booth, where two girls didn't know what they were selling, and a kiddie shop, which fascinated the parents more than the kids.

And all opened into the "Crossroads Cafe," where you could even bring a Hardee's milk shake.

Suggest Boxes Products Of SG

The Campus Affairs Committee is opening lines of communications from students to Student Government by installing suggestion boxes at Lenoir Hall, GM, and the Y - Court, according to chairman Ken Day.

"Anyone can offer suggestions," Day said. "We'll do our best to put them before the Student Legislature."

The old boxes have been out of use for about a year. The new ones will be checked once a week to assure students of prompt consideration of their suggestions.

Terry O'Neill, head of the subcommittee in charge of the boxes, said, "we opened all the old boxes and found some interesting suggestions. One person wanted better food for the student special even if the price goes up to 50 cents."

The committee did much of the work in getting free telephones installed in Lenoir Hall, Chase Cafeteria.

rule on campus." "I think it would be unwise. If we had them (no closing hours), people would generally come in earlier."

"I wouldn't be in favor of it. The average Carolina coed isn't responsible enough not to have any restrictions."

Of the girls questioned 40 per cent favored closing hours for all women; 28.9 per cent preferred no closing hours for any women; 13.3 per cent thought seniors, graduate students, and any others twenty - one or older should not have closing hours but that all other women students should have them; 8.9 per cent favored closing hours for freshmen women only; 4.4 per cent were indifferent or had no definite opinion on the subject; 2.2 per cent thought juniors, seniors, and grad students should not have closing hours; and 2.2 per cent thought that only grad students should not have closing hours.

The president of one dorm stated: "The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline says, and I quote, 'There shall be closing hours for women.' Right now there's just no way to do away with closing hours."

The Committee is not willing to get involved in the controversy."

A questionnaire concerning closing hours was distributed to the girls on campus last year. The vice - president of WRC stated that the general consensus of last year's questionnaire was that the girls wanted closing hours extended but not done away with altogether. She went on to say, "We can't do away with closing hours anyway."

Many of those questioned expressed opinions favoring apartments for women who want to have them and an extension of weekend closing hours.
