

Fellowships Awarded

Two UNC faculty members have won coveted foreign study fellowships in the humanities for special advanced scholarly pursuits in Rome and London, during 1967-68.

The National Endowment for the Humanities of Washington, D. C. announced that Prof. Henry Boren of the History Department and John Schnorrenberg of the Art Department have been awarded grants for a year's study and research abroad.

Mr. Boren will go to Rome, with a senior fellowship, and will work in the American Academy. He is a specialist in ancient history. "Coinage" is his research area.

Mr. Schnorrenberg has received a junior fellowship, and will be assigned to the Institute for Historical Research in London. His objective is to find more about early Anglican Architecture. He will also make a study of Gothic Survival Architecture. His work will take him to several parts of England.

 sea — kind of lost — in a foreign land. With an ISC, it would stimulate people to show you who they are and who you are."

Santosh Gupta, a bio-pharmacy student from Bombay, India, said the initial response from American students would be antagonistic.

"Foreign students must first come out of their shells and change their habits," he said. "Activities here are oriented towards people from the Western hemisphere. The ISC should give the Eastern people a chance to learn. We will have to learn to give in more and adapt ourselves to the American way."

 He suggested the ISC house a foreign student advisor to aid the students in getting summer jobs. He also said the ISC should be a center for Americans to go to who are interested in entertaining foreign students on weekends.

Tran Thi Thu - Minh, a library science student from Saigon, Vietnam, plans to be a medical librarian in the Saigon Medical Center. She believes the ISC will be beneficial to both American and foreign students.

"If an American student doesn't have the chance to get out of the country," she said, "he can get a foreign student at the ISC to tell him about his country. One person here asked me if Saigon was far from Vietnam. I'm amazed the views here are so limited."

Minh said the ISC would "break the barriers of foreign students."

"We need a link to get acquainted with other foreign students," she said. "You learn a lot by talking to other foreign students — different concepts that you sometimes have to stop and think about."

Elissee Echeverri, a physical therapy student from Columbia, South American, also thinks the ISC will serve a dual purpose.

"It's a very good idea," she said. "The foreign students will be together, and it will help American students to practice the language they're interested in."

"The American students living with the foreign students will be the ones who have some knowledge and interest in international affairs. A foreign student feels lonely sometimes — the ISC will help him find new relationships."

Applications are now being accepted from students who would like to live in the International Student Center in the Y-Office and 213 Murphey. "We're looking for outgoing people — people who have an interest outside their realm," said Steve Mueller, ISC co-ordinator. "The American students will hopefully be the type who are astute enough to tell the foreign students when something is wrong. The ISC will provide a place where foreign students can go if they have a problem."

"These people need a place to go, for coffee or discussion or just a place that's theirs," Mueller said. "The ISC will be the center of international activity on campus, and it will give the American students a chance to know just what these people on the other side of the world are like."

-Dorm Classes-

 as they study and play bridge and drink cokes, learning will be far more effective since the varied aspects of university won't be so widely separated.

In this light, the professors who are considering teaching a class in a residence hall are asked to consider not merely transferring their classes but transforming them as well.

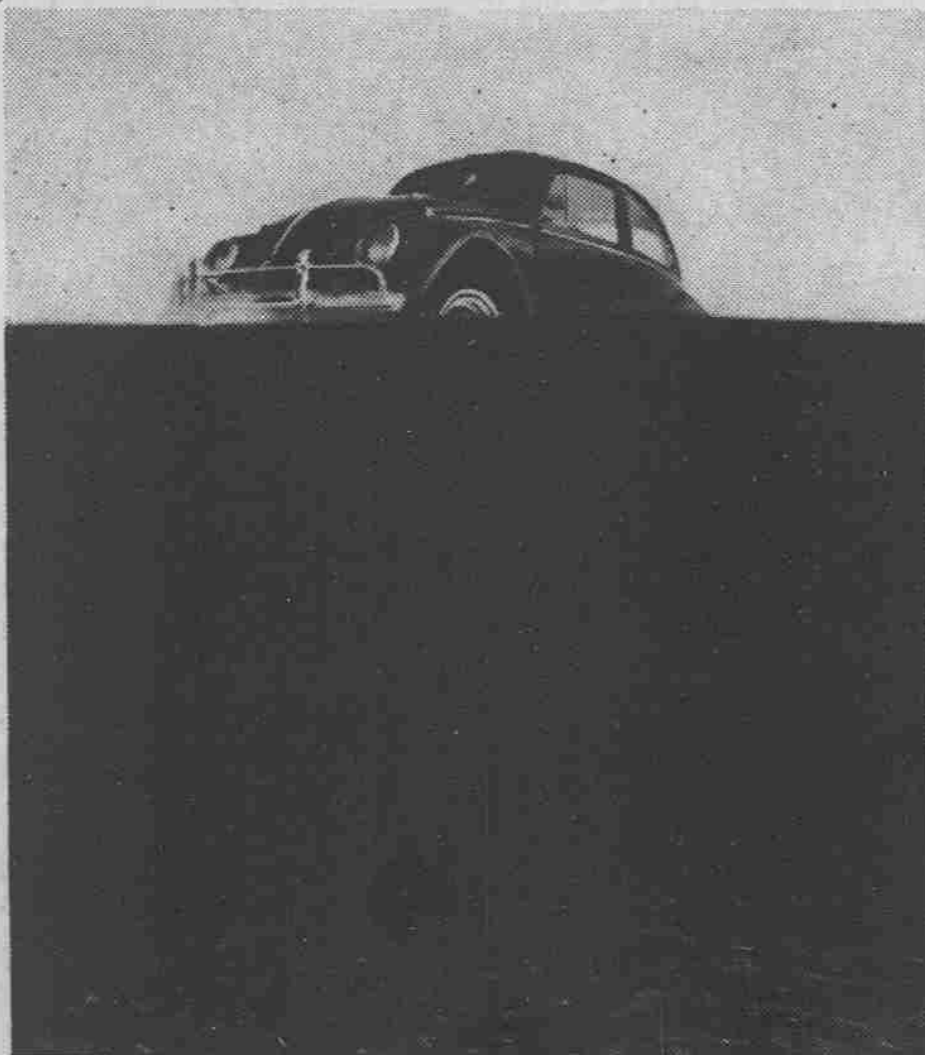

It is felt that the change in physical surroundings away from the traditional formal classroom setting will provide a freer atmosphere for better interchange of ideas, particularly when informal seminars can be held immediately following the class and when the professor and his students can sit down in the students room or in a lounge downstairs.

Already, there are several professors who have expressed interest in teaching classes fall, in addition to Dr. John Semonche, Dr. James Devereux and Dr. Charles Reckford.

In the English department, Dr. Patterson has expressed interest. There will be at least one section of Political Science 41. Dr. Hill, chairman of the religion department, has agreed to teach a class in Religion 30.

Longino, a Ph.D. candidate in sociology, has offered a section in Sociology 51, and in the Modern Civ. department, Dr. Pinckney has volunteered.

"What we hope," Hudson said, "is to have at least one section of all the courses which have multiple sections, so there will be a good chance of there being a class coming from a single residence college, or in the case of Mod. Civ., one class for each floor in Morrison."

Volkswagen's unique construction keeps moisture out.

For years there have been rumors about floating Volkswagens.

Why not? The bottom of the VW isn't like ordinary car bottoms: A sheet of flat steel runs under the car, sealing the bottom fore and aft.

That's not done to make a bad boat out of it, just a better car. The sealed bottom protects a VW from water, dirt and salt. All the nasty things on the road that eventually eat up a car.

The top part of a Volkswagen is also very seaworthy. It's practically airtight. So airtight that it's hard to close the door without rolling down the window a bit.

But there's still one thing to keep in mind if you own a Volkswagen. Even if it could definitely float, it couldn't float indefinitely.

So drive around the big puddles. Especially if they're big enough to have a name.
