

UNC Rates High In Acceptances For Med School

Two out of three of the students at the University of North Carolina here who apply for medical school are accepted and become medical students.

This record places UNC among the top 25 schools in the U. S. supplying the largest number of entering first-year medical students.

The national acceptance rate among applicants for medical school in 1964-65 was 47.2 per cent and the percentage of the applicants who actually became medical students was 44.7 per cent.

UNC's acceptance rate was 64.7 per cent and the percentage of UNC applicants who became medical students was 62.2 per cent.

The figures are based on a study by the American Association of Medical Colleges.

The study found that the average applicant filed about six applications with medical schools. The average UNC applicant filed half that number (3.2 applications).

UNC had 119 students seeking admission to medical schools in 1964-65, of this number, 77 were accepted and 74 actually entered medical school.

The AAMC also reported that UNC and other schools with 60 or more medical school entrants each year have the lowest dropout rate.

NIH Panel Taps Sitterson

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson has been appointed to the National Advisory Allergy and Infectious Diseases Council.

He is participating in the Council meeting which started yesterday, and his term continues until February, 1971. As a council member, Dr. Sitterson will advise the Surgeon General on grant activities of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, one of the eight National Institutes of Health. Upon the recommendation of the NIH National Advisory Councils, the Surgeon General awards grants to research scientists in universities and other non-Federal institutions.

A teacher and historian, Dr. Sitterson has written or edited seven books, is a contributor to historical reviews, and is a member of the board of editors of the Journal of Southern History. He has taught at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill since 1935, was named dean of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1955, and dean of the general college in 1961. He became vice chancellor in 1965 and chancellor last year. He has been Kenan Professor of History since 1961.

Club To Hear Poetry

University of North Carolina Faculty Club members will be treated to poetry readings by students and professors at their noon meeting Tuesday.

Prof. Forrest Read of the English Department, who initiated the popular Poetry Forum on campus this year, is in charge of the program featuring UNC poets. The banquet-style luncheon will be held at the UNC Faculty Club.

Reading poems will be Prof. Charles D. Wright of the English faculty; Mark Weinkle, a freshman from Decatur, Ga.; and Russell Banks, a senior from Chapel Hill and editor of the new campus literary magazine, "Lillabulero."

Legislator On ETV

State Representative Earl W. Vaughan, a Democrat from Rockingham County, will be the featured guest on "North Carolina News Conference" Monday. Vaughan is frequently mentioned as a likely prospect for House Speaker in the 1969 General Assembly.

The weekly news program, moderated by Richard Hatch, is broadcast at 7 p.m. over University of North Carolina educational television stations WUNC-TV, Channel 4, and WUNB-TV, Channel 2.

A panel of Tar Heel newsmen will be invited to question Vaughan, John Young, director of television at the Chapel Hill studio, is executive producer of the program.

Dentists To Convene

Fifteen research projects at the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry will be described in Washington, D. C., next week at the annual meeting of the International Association for Dental Research.

The meeting is usually attended by more than 1,200 dental scientists.

The local research, ranging from studies of nerve structures in the head and face to the use of fluoride compounds to reduce tooth decay in children, has been conducted during the past year by the UNC dental faculty and dental students assigned to summer projects.

Greenwald Appointed

Dr. E. K. Greenwald, a research associate in the Department of Physical Medicine at Ohio State University for the past year, has been given a joint appointment as an instructor in biomedical engineering and biomathematics at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine here and N. C. State University in Raleigh.

He is a native of Dayton, Ky., graduated in engineering physics from Ohio State University's College of Engineering and received a doctorate in biophysics from Ohio State.

He has taught in the College of Engineering and the College of Medicine at Ohio State, and has been a research assistant there in the Department of Physics.

Physicist To Speak

Dr. Leroy Colquitt, Jr. from Michigan State University will speak on "Magnetic Resonance in Metals" during the UNC Physic Department's solid state seminar Tuesday, March 14, at 2 p.m. (Room 233 Phillips Hall).

Dr. Colquitt, who earned his Ph.D. in physics at the University of Pittsburgh, has been concerned with how electron dynamics in complicated metals influence their magnetic and electrical properties.
