none of it. It seems they were told to go fly a kite as yesterday and then found they were to be supervised. However, once the coeds got into the mood they thoroughly enjoyed it. As witness above. On the left Jeannie Blair and

Cathy Caswell gave into the skies trying to discern the tiny specks in the upper atmosphere. Next, Kay Ogburn rescues hers from a kiteeating tree, as an unidentified coed sends hers up ino the heights. Also, the Thetas gang up to inspect their apparatus and Robin Castle flies hers with great skill and daring.

"That's the end of this here NOW PLAYING tape, you'all, don't re-dial if'n ya want to hear it again." the sultry Southern voice announced through the headphones.

You'te probably heard this blurb a thousand times in language lab and are still laughing at it. It's only one of the many mad-cap devices invented by L R. Grive electronics manager of the language laboratory and his assistant, Dave Walters.

The purpose of the comic endings and occasional music that appear at the end of the language tapes is to combat inattentiveness, according to Grieve. "The endings come in and wake the listeners up. They may cause a little levity, but at least they're awake," he explained.

Grieve, who initiated the comic blurbs about five years ago, has used them for other

When the students who were about to take the exams put on their eaphones, they hear French Christmas carols and songs by Marlene Dietrich. They laughed and went on to take the exams, considerably less nervous than when they entered the room.

Grieve recalled another incident that occurred when some Peace Corps trainees worked in the lab during the summer. They were learning the languages of the countries to which they would be sent to work. Some had the headphones on for six or seven consecutive hours.

Comic relief was needed, so Grive decided to do something about the situation. He locked two of the native African Peace Corps Informants

Can you study-read at 1,000 words per minute? If not, you need Reading Dynamics.

The average Reading Dynamics graduate reads 4.7 times faster than before . . . and he knows how to study.

You probably aren't even aware of your own reading speed. Just for kicks, time yourself on this ad. If you're an average reader, you'll probably be reading at between 250 and 400 words a minute. But when you study-read, say in philosophy or history, that speed goes down to between 150 and 300 words a minute.

You need Reading Dynamics. Anyone who has to read as much as you do needs Reading Dynamics. It's one sure way to make your college years count. Learning to read an average of 4.7 times faster is only the beginning. Reading Dynamics stresses comprehension as much as speed. After ten weeks, you'll read at a much higher rate of speed, and understand more of what you read. Perhaps most important to you, Reading Dynamics will show you how to study. You'll learn the best way to preview a book, to summarize, and to recall what you've read.

If you read faster, read more, understand more, and remember more, it stands to reason that you'll be able to make better grades. But there's a side benefit of Reading Dynamics you may not have even considered. (Sshhh . . . don't tell your folks or even your best friend.) You'll have more time for football, music, parties - whatever your favorite extracurricular activity is.

Here's what Gary Hemric, a junior at Davidson College and a varsity football player, has to say about the course. (Incidentally, Gary now reads at about 5,000 words per minute.)

"The techniques I learned in Reading Dynamics have helped me greatly in my college studies. The study and review methods introduced in the course are of reading and study that are so necessary in college. And with my increased reading rate, I have enough free time to participate in college football, as well as take a full schedule of courses." We are so convinced that Evelyn Wood's valuable assets to me in the many hours

Reading Dynamics can benefit you, we offer this money-back guarantee:

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any fully paid student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our standardized

If you'd like to have the edge on grades, scholarships, knowledge - even fun you owe it to yourself to take a course in Reading Dynamics. What are you waiting for? There's no better time than now for Reading Dynamics. After all, think of the time you've already lost, the books you've missed, the A's that have eluded you, the movies you passed up to study. Let Reading Dynamics change all that, this semester. You'll benefit the rest of the year . . . and the rest of your life.

Think we're putting you on? Attend the free Reading Dynamics demonstrations and find out.
