North Carolina has the task of defending its Atlantic Coast Conference basketball title. and both the press and opposing coaches say the Heels will do just that.

Of the forty members of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association who voted in a preseason poll, 39 picked UNC as the top team in the ACC. Here is a rundown on the other seven teams in the conference in the order in which they were picked to finish by both the writers and the coaches.

SOUTH CAROLINA (8-4) ACC, 16-7 overall). Coach Frank McGuire lost 6-9 Al Salvadori and 6-8 Lynn Burkholder to graduation, but still has the makings of a solid should be enough to get the Wolfpack out of the ACC cellar. Norm Sloan also has a fine sophomore in Nelson Isley and returnees Nick Trifunovich, Dick Braucher, Joe Serdich, and Bill Kretzer.

However, Biedenback is the big man for the Pack. In 1966 he was All-ACC, but sat out last year with an injury.

MARYLAND (5-9 ACC, 11-14 overall). Jay McMillen, last year's top Terapin scorer and Coach Bud Millikin are both gone from College Park, New coach Frank Fellows does however have several lettermen and a fine group of sophomores.

Pete Johnson, yho hit for 13 points a game last year, and Billy Jones, one of the conference's top defensive players, head the holdovers. Rich Drescher also saw plenty of action last year and will be a starter this season.

The man the Terps are really counting on is soph Will Hetzel. The brother of Davidson's All-American, Fred Hetzel, averaged 19.2 as a freshman and at 6-6 is also being counted on for his rebounding, Tom Milroy and figures for the frosh and are John Prebula scored in double rated as top reserves.

VIRGINIA (4-10 ACC, 9-17 manned by veteran Gary overall). The Cavaliers knew they would miss the graduated Jim Connelly, who produced 20 points a game last season, but did not expect to do without forward Buddy Reams. Reams, the team's top rebounder, recently suffered a back injury and will be lost for the sason. With Reams not available, Coach Bill Gibson will moved 6-4 Chip Case from the averaged 16.4 points per game backcourt to forward. Case as a sophomore last year and is being counted on to carry much of Cavalier offensive load.

Mike Katos (14.8 last year) will start at the other corner with 6-10 Norm Carmichael or 6-9 John Naponick at center. Tony Kinn averaged 27.3 as a freshman and will see plenty of backcourt duty. The other guard spot will probably be Laws.

CLEMSON (9-5 ACC, 17-8 overall). Bobby Roberts faces the toughest task of his coaching career at Clemson. The Tigers lost six of their top seven players to graduation.

Among the missing are All-ACC center Randy Mahaffey and guard Jim Sutherland, who scored 34 points a game between them last year.

The lone returning starter is borther, Randy Mahaffey's brother, Richie, the last in a long line of Mahaffeys to perform at Clemson, Richie hit for 10.2 markers per contest his sophomore year and will be the key man in the Tiger offense this season.

George Zatezalo, a 5-11 guard, offers the only help for Mahaffey. Zatealo averaged 22.4 as a freshman and is the only real scoring threat on the team outside of Mahaffey.

Fencing at Carolina? Sure, and we also have a cricket team secretly practicing in Kenan Stadium. But honest to goodness, UNC has a fencing team with a fulltime coach for the first time in memorable history.

The coach, Ron Miller, is long acquainted with fencing, having handled swords for nine years. His first mission is to wipe out preconceptions about the sport.

idea that fencing is a sissy sport," he said, "but to me, this is a falsehood. An athlete can find more than his share of a challenge regarding physical activity and body control in fencing."

Fencing can be fun, as attested by a magazine article by sword addict Alfred Bester. In the article Bester told of his fencing coach at college, "a paranoid Italian who would appear with a .45 revolver on his hip. He believed fencing should be a serious preparation for the duel.

> Miller fenced in high school and college and coached a year at Eastern Kentucky before coming to UNC this year. He has trained under Jack Espanosa, a professional who is a protege of Julio Costello, America's leading fencer.

Many of the large American cities have private salons in which a "maestro" gives lessons. "I had a friend who made $2 million in 30 years of fencing instruction in Detroit,"

Miller said. But such conditions don't exist in Chapel Hill. "When I first got here," he said, "I was pretty discouraged. The facilities, equipment and team didn't look like much, but the athletic and physical education departments have helped greatly."

Miller has six fencers -Tom Ruff, Dick Betts, Jeff Mc-Cay, Dick Wilson, Bill McDaniel and Carl Thompson - on his 25 man team with a year's experience. Peter Batke has fenced for two years. The rest of the team has had only 10 weeks.

It doesn't take much time to train a fencer according to Miller since fencing "is a sport in which you deceive your opponent. You outwit him both by mind and body."

Three weapons are used in fencing competition - the foil epee and sabre.

The foil is a light weapon. and its point must be thrust to the opponent's torso and blade bent in order for a point to be scored. These yeapons won't penetrate the body.

The epee a little more dangerous. It is rigged with electrical devices so when a fencer touches his opponent for a point, a light flashes to in-dicate a touch. Both fencers have wire cords attached to their suits and a touch may be made anywhere on the body.

The sabre is more like a common sword. A fencer can score by touching his opponent with either the blade or the

This is what happens when a team soars to national ranking. The general public was the first to be closed out on tickets. The student body allotment, of course, is limited and now the press is finding entrance to Carmichael Auditorium a rough road.

The Daily Tar Heel planned to man the game with two photographers. Williams had only one ticket available, but promised the Tar Heel that he "would do something to get the other photographer in."

Frosh Meet

By RICK BREWER of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

North Carolina takes the wraps off its 1967-68 freshman basketball team this evening when the Tar Babies entertain Louisburg College in Carmichael Auditorium Unveiling time for the yearlings will be 6 p.m.

The game, a preliminary contest to Carolina's varsity match with Virginia Tech, will be the first chance Carolina fans will have to see the new crop of frosh. Four members of the team did play in the Blue-White scrimmage a few weeks ago, however.

Bill Guthridge, in his first year at the helm of the Tar Babies, will field a club whose obvious strength is good height. The three front court starters stand 6-7, 6-9, and 6-

Lee Dedmon, a 6-10, 195 pound native of Baltimore, Md., will man one position up front. Alongside him will be 6-9 Don Eggleston, a 215 pound Charlotte, N.C. product, and David Chadwick, a 6-7, 200 pounder from Orlando, Fla. Dedmon drew raves for his fine play in the Blue-White scrimmage. He scored 13 points and pulled down 10 rebounds against proven varsity stars like Bill Bunting and Rusty Clark. Eggleston and Chadwick also played in the practice game as did Richard Tuttle, at 6-0 and 160 pounds, is a brother of varsity reserve Gerald. He will start at one guard for the frosh with Dale Gipple at the other. Gipple, the only non-scholarship starter, is a 6-0, 170 pound native of Burlington, N.C. Tuttle is from London, Ky.
