

—DTH Staff Photo By Tom Schnabel

COMFORT AFTER DEFEAT—A UNC boater finds comfort in the arms of his girl after the Carolina squad lost to Michigan State, 5-0, Monday in the NCAA regional playoffs here. See story on page four.

Effective Next Semester

Self-Limiting Hours Granted For Senior, Junior Women

Significant Step Says Sitterson

By BOBBY NOWELL
DTH Staff Writer

The University has adopted a policy for self-limiting hours for upperclass women students, Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson announced Monday.

The new policy, which Sitterson termed "a step forward for the University," and "a significant step in recognizing the maturity and responsibility of our women students," was recommended by a student-faculty-administration committee and was authorized by the Chancellor and Consolidated University President William Friday.

It will permit each campus of the Consolidated University to adopt "academic, disciplinary, and security requirements" under which certain categories of women students living in University housing may determine for themselves times of departure and return to their residences.

For the Chapel Hill campus, this will include (1) upperclasswomen over 21 years of age; (2) bona fide juniors and seniors under 21 years of age who have submitted written parental permission to the University; and (3) 2.0 average and no record of discipline for those eligible juniors and seniors.

The policy will go into effect on each campus "when the academic disciplinary and security requirements have been developed and promulgated and after parents of all women students have been advised of these," according to the report issued by the Chancellor.

Sitterson said that he considered these factors "details of implementation" which will be worked out by the Women's Residence Council (WRC) and the Dean of Women's Office.

Libby Idol, WRC chairman, said she is "delighted" with the policy and added "it is broader than I expected in that it includes juniors. But I think this was farsight on the part of the administration since pressure would have been stronger to include juniors next, anyway."

Miss Idol said she and the rest of the WRC would do everything possible to have the policy effective by next semester.

Sitterson praised the joint committee for its "comprehensive, cooperative, and productive efforts" in the "identification and appraisal of factors which had to be taken into account in considering adoption of this policy."

The committee began its deliberations last spring and worked during the summer drafting the questionnaire which the women students recently answered.

"Their work is a good illustration of the University dealing with problems concerning itself in a highly thoughtful, intelligent manner," Sitterson said.

"I expect that we will see this kind of decision-making will reflect responsibility on (Continued on page 6)

—DTH Staff Photo By Tom Schnabel

LAMBDA CHI FIRE—A fire Monday afternoon destroyed a room and its contents at the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house. No one was injured in the blaze, but the social room was reported to have received some smoke damage.

Prohibited Political Activity

12 Students Arrested At Bragg

FAYETTEVILLE—Twelve area college students, 11 from UNC and one from N.C. State including a DTH reporter were arrested at Fort Bragg Saturday evening and charged with suspicion of entering the reservation to engage in prohibited political activity.

The students were identified as Scott Bradley, senior, Darien, Conn.; John Steiger, junior, Princeton, N.J.; Robert Lock, senior, Jacksonville, N.C.; Andy Rose, junior, Chapel Hill; Charles Mann, freshman, Chapel Hill; Hugh McConnell, graduate student, Upper Montclair, N.J.; Adolph Reed, senior, New Orleans, La.; Sam Austell, junior, Greenville, S.C.; Lloyd Clayton, sophomore, Birmingham, Ala.; and Don Storey, sophomore, Newport News, Va.

W.S.I. Course

A retraining course for water safety instructors will be offered next week, the physical education department announced Monday.

The non-credit course will meet for 10 hours Tuesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

To be eligible for the course a student must already have a W.S.I. certificate.

The first meeting will be tonight at 7:30 p.m. in 304 Woolen Gym.

All had come to the base under the auspices of the UNC United Anti-War Mobilization Front (UAWMF), a coalition of leftist campus organizations.

Also arrested were N.C. State student, Alan Cole, a freshman from Newport News, Va. and reporter Mike Cozza, senior, Windsor, Conn., who was covering the group's activities for the Daily Tar Heel.

The students were charged with violating Title 18, U.S. Code, section 1382, which provides that "picketing, demonstrations, sit-ins, protest marches, or similar activities" are prohibited on federal reservations. If convicted, the students face a maximum penalty of six months in prison and/or a $500 fine.

Charges were filed early Sunday morning in the court of U.S. Commissioner Wallace Jackson. All the students pleaded not guilty and requested a continuance, except Cozza, who accepted an immediate hearing.

Cozza pleaded not guilty and explained his status as a reporter, not a member of the anti-war group. After hearing the evidence, Commissioner Jackson postponed judgment until Nov. 25, when the other students will be tried.

At the time of their arrests, two of the students, Mann and Rose, were handing out leaflets at a movie theater on base, while the other students observed their activities.

The entire group, however, was arrested at about 7 p.m. by several Military Policemen and taken to the Provost Marshal's office where they were held in "protective custody" for several hours and interrogated pending charges.

The group had come to Fort Bragg from Chapel Hill earlier Saturday afternoon to "leaflet soldiers and interested citizens and talk with them about the rights of soldiers to oppose the war in Vietnam."

Upon arrival at the base they were placed under surveillance and a few of the group were informed by Operations and Enforcements Officer Keller that they would be arrested if they violated the prohibition of "picketing, demonstrations, sit-ins, protest marches, and similar activities."

The students left at about 4:30 p.m., and a spokesman said they would try to determine from legal counsel whether "similar activities" covered leafleting and free discussion. The spokesman said the students had no intention of violating any law.

They proceeded to downtown Fayetteville, where they talked to police and reporters and ate dinner. The group then returned to Bragg at about 6:30 p.m. and went to the theater where they were arrested.

The leaflets that Mann and Rose handed out were titled "An open letter to our men in service." The leaflet said the students were concerned about reports that war protestors do not support soldiers.

"We do support you," the leaflet read, but "we do not support the war... We don't want you to kill anyone or be killed. We want you home alive and in one piece, not in a wooden box."

Trials for the eleven students, and the judgment for Cozza will be held Nov. 25 at the U.S. Post Office Building in Fayetteville. All the accused were released on their own recognizance.

NUC Charges Irregularity In Campus Facility Use

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has been asked to investigate the University's practice of denying the use of certain campus facilities to campus groups for fund-raising purposes.

In a letter sent by the New University Conference (NUC) the group stated that the University permits some organizations on campus to use its facilities but not others. They also charged that the granting of such was done on an "obviously partisan basis."

The issue was raised last year when the use of facilities was denied to the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). They had planned to present a benefit concert featuring Judy Collins. Reasons for the denial at the time included the argument that Miss Collins lacked wide audience appeal.

For lack of clear evidence of discrimination against the SDS and because of the unavailability of Miss Collins for the concert, the matter was dropped.

Since Miss Collins is appearing in concert this Friday, members of the NUC felt that this would be a good time to raise the issue again.

To the matter of discrimination, the letter pointed out that a substantial portion of the gross receipts from the Bob Hope Show at Carmichael Auditorium last spring was given to a campus ROTC-related organization.

This information was supplied by Howard Henry, director of the Carolina Union. Another example of campus organizations using University facilities for fund raising affairs was the use of Memorial Hall for the Germans Club weekend.

The letter stated enforcement of the rule preventing campus organizations from charging admission to entertainment which they themselves bring was done on a selective basis.

Such selective enforcement, they contended, raises serious questions about the purpose of the rule.

In asking for the investigation by the AAUP, the NUC pointed out a statement by the organization saying, "The institutional control of campus facilities should not be used as a device for censorship."

Copies of the letter have been sent to the president of the University of North Carolina AAUP, the regional office of the AAUP and administration officials.

Street Protesters Will Stand Trial

The six students and faculty members arrested in connection with the "street party" Nov. 5 will be tried this morning in the Chapel Hill courtroom on the second floor of the Town Hall.

Two faculty members and four students were arrested on the night of Nov. 5, but one student, Bryan McKay, was released and another, George Vlasits, was arrested four days later.

The "street party" was on election night demonstration sponsored by Southern Student Organizing Committee (SSOC). Hundreds of students were gathered around a band on a flat bed truck on Franklin Street.

The police attempted to

Lenoir: 'All You Can Eat'

The north dining room of Lenoir Hall will be sacrificing variety in favor of quantity on an experimental basis this week.

George Prillaman, director of University Food Services, said Monday that the serve-yourself dining hall, which offers "all you can eat for a dollar," will be serving a limited selection of foods this week on a large-quantity basis.

The purpose of the experiment, according to Prillaman, is to determine whether students prefer having an unlimited supply of a certain carefully-selected dinners to having a limited supply of several different dinners.

"What we are doing," said Prillaman, "is putting out something different each night and trying to figure out what students like best and whether they prefer this system."

"If this isn't what the students want, then we will go back to the old system," he added.

"We are trying to offer the most popular dinners and to lessen the complaints about running out of certain items on the menu."

direct the traffic in one lane around the crowd. Dr. Laurence Kessler of the history department was warned by police not to cross the street too frequently.

Kessler was arrested while standing in the crowd, carried away into a police car by a plainclothesman, and taken to the Chapel Hill police station. He was charged with allegedly obstructing traffic.

The second arrest was Bryan McKay. He was carried to the police station followed by a substantial segment of the street party crowd. In the confusion of the crowd that approached the police station, Eric Clay was charged with obstructing an officer.

At the Chapel Hill police station, a confrontation between students and about thirty police and plainclothesmen resulted in three more arrests.

Peter Hulth, a UNC freshman, and Walter Hicks, of the UNC English department, were both arrested for alleged disorderly conduct.

Meri Robbins was involved in the scuffle at the door of the police station for allegedly assaulting an officer.

George Vlasits, although present at the police station during the incident, was not arrested until Saturday, Nov. 9, in Durham. He was charged with obstructing traffic and assaulting an officer.

Trial proceedings for the six are scheduled to begin at 9:00 a.m.

Miss Withrow went to Dean Carmichael with the request and found her, "excited about

A residence hall where UNC coed students can live with foreign female students is to be established by next fall.

"All this year girls have been asking why there is no international house for girls like the one now existing for boys in Carr Dorm," said Danielle Withrow, co-chairman of the International Student Center.

Miss Withrow went to Dean Carmichael with the request and found her, "excited about the idea."

"Dean Carmichael had tried to start this years ago but found the necessary interest lacking. But when she was informed of the interest now on campus, she immediately started to work on the idea."

Dean Carmichael, along with Mr. Woodell, foreign student advisor, a representative from the WRC and Miss Withrow will go to UNC-G today to investigate the method used there in forming their International House this year.

The precise details of the proposed international house here have not been worked out but current plans call for the use of one or two floors in an existing girls dorm.

"There has already been shown enough interest among the girls on the committees of the ISC to fill one floor," Miss Withrow said.

"We will try to set up the international house like the present system for men at Carr Building, with one international student and one American student in a room."

"However, there is going to be some difficulty in doing this since there are only about 30 foreign girls on campus. Because of this shortage the floor will also serve as a language hall, so a girl taking French or Spanish can have a roommate who speaks the language."

"We feel that since the girls

International Coed Dorm Planned

Will House Foreign, American Women Students