

Symposium Art Showing

Blending in with its surroundings, a sculptural exhibit in front of the Carolina Union is concerned with man in his natural environment. The exhibit is a part of the Carolina Symposium.

The artist, Mayo Mac Boggs, a graduate fellow in the Art Department, said that the pieces form a theme of continuity.

"The metal sculptures blend in with the trees and become a part of the natural environment," he said. Conversely, he added, the trees themselves become a part of the whole theme of the exhibit. Each enhances the other.

Boggs, who taught sculpture last semester, now instructs arts and crafts. An art graduate of the University of Kentucky, he said he came to North Carolina because of its natural environment.

He pointed out that the color of the pieces, a light green, blends with the color of the plants and changes slightly as the season changes.

Bob Scott To Release Report Here

North Carolina Gov. Robert Scott will release a progress report on his Environmental Study Commission's work when he appears for the Carolina Symposium here.

Gov. Scott is scheduled to speak Tuesday, March 17 at 3 p.m.

The Environmental Study Commission was appointed in January to study the effects of the work of state agencies on pollution in North Carolina.

Scott said that at that time the state should analyze its own pollutants as well as policing pollution caused by businesses.

The committee is scheduled to release its report on July 1. Scott gave no indication of what he would disclose at the Symposium.

The governor is slated to speak on "Environmental Quality in North Carolina."

UNC Prof To Head Assoc. Of Chaplains

Chaplain Fred W. Reid Jr., Professor of Hospital Administration and hospital chaplain at N.C. Memorial Hospital here, has been elected president-elect of the College of Chaplains of the American Protestant Hospital Association (APHA).

As an officer of the College of Chaplains, Reid will serve on the Board of Trustees, in the House of Delegates and in the councils and committees of the APHA. As president-elect, he will be responsible for arranging the program and speakers for the next annual meeting of the College in 1971.

The APHA College of Chaplains consists of over 600 clergymen from 20 denominations. Since its founding in 1946, its members have promoted improved total patient care by means of support of a chaplain's division, the establishing of chaplaincy programs, and the professional certification of chaplains.

A graduate of the University of Richmond, Reid holds a B.D. degree from the Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest and a Th.M. from the Divinity School of Duke University. He is currently a doctoral candidate at UNC.

Reid was appointed hospital chaplain at N.C. Memorial Hospital in 1961. He is supervisor of a training program in Clinical Pastoral Education for Hospital Chaplaincy at NCMH and is fully accredited by the Association for Clinical Pastoral Education, Inc.

Police Nab 5 In Disturbance

Five members of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity were arrested and spent the night in jail Thursday for a charge of disturbing the peace.

Chapel Hill Police Chief W.D. Blake said the five were released from jail at 5 a.m. Friday morning.

Those arrested were George Crawford, James Couch, Charles Parker, Tinsley Merrill and Granville Taylor.

Blake said the police received a call about 10:18 p.m. complaining of noise coming from the Beta party house.

He said police warned the Betas they were making noise but the disturbance continued. At 11:20 policemen arrested the youths at the house.

Crawford said the group was going to hire a lawyer to represent them, at their trial March 25. He claimed they were not informed of their rights or allowed to make a phone call.

The youths were charged $50 to get out of jail.

UNC Retraining Service Workers

UNC is attempting to increase the manpower resources of North Carolina by retraining 21 former maids, clerks and cafeteria workers.

By September these employees will be laboratory assistants if they pass the course they are now taking at the UNC School of Medicine.

Their curriculum includes both academic and technical courses; arithmetic, chemistry, biology, laboratory procedures and the use of complicated equipment.

The program is funded by the Medical School, the University of North Carolina, and the U.S. Labor Department's New Careers program through Operation Breakthrough.

All UNC funding is from non-State sources.

Dr. Edward Glassman, a professor of biochemistry, who is responsible for the course, points out that the course should be considered an investment in North Carolina resources. One difficulty of attracting high-wage industry to this area is the lack of skilled workers.

"Unfortunately, skilled labor does not move into an area lacking suitable industry," he said.

For this reason, this Technical Training Program for 21 former clerks, maids and cafeteria workers is considered a partial solution to this problem.
