Female Lib does part for women

by Jessica Hanchar
Staff Writer

The UNC Female Liberation No. 27 is taking part in International Women's Day by distributing pamphlets of articles which examine different aspects of women's lives.

International Women's Day commemorates the actions of thousands of women from the garment workers' districts of New York City in 1857. They marched into the wealthier neighborhoods to demand improved working conditions, decent wages, a reduction of the working day to ten hours and recognition of equal rights for women.

The women protested after several of them were killed in a factory fire. The factory provided no fire regulations for safety precautions.

The protestors were violently attacked and dispersed by the police.

A massive strike by women needle workers followed in 1910 after several more protests and strikes by the workers.

In memory of the New York women, Clara Zetkin called for the celebration of International Women's Day at the Conference of Socialist Women.

International Women's Day is now celebrated March 8 around the world in honor of all women of all nationalities, races and ages who have worked for the rights of women.

The UNC group of Female Liberation has several smaller groups working in various aspects of women's lives.

The campus group meets Monday nights in the Student Union. Any woman is welcomed to find out what she can do for women's rights.

Cabala, the town group, is holding an Open House Thursday, March 11, at Wesleyan Center at 8 p.m. All women interested in women's rights, both on and off campus, are invited to find out more about town activities in Female Liberation.

Members of the group operate a literature booth at the Student Union every Tuesday.

Folks passing the Post Office on Franklin Street Sunday afternoon were greeted by the pickin' and fiddlin' of the New Deal String Band. The group, which specializes in bluegrass music, played for more than an hour in the midday sunshine.

For Board of Aldermen

Bernholz, Smith to run again

Two Chapel Hill aldermen have announced their intention to run for re-election in the May 4 municipal election.

Attorney Steve Bernholz and Chapel Hill High School Assistant Principal R.D. Smith have chosen to seek additional four-year terms on the Board.

The other two aldermen whose terms have expired, Mrs. Alice Welsh and Joe Nassif, have not announced their intentions to seek re-election, but are expected to do so.

Aldermen Ross Scroggs and George Coxhead have two more years to serve on their Board terms.

Bernholz, a graduate of the University in 1962 and the UNC Law School in 1966, is a member of the firm of Winston, Coleman and Bernholz in Chapel Hill.

Bernholz is the vice president of the Orange County Bar Association and is a member of several other national professional organizations.

He is a cooperating attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Bernholz was appointed to the Board in 1969 to fill out an unexpired term.

In announcing his candidacy, Bernholz praised the current Board of Aldermen and pledged to continue to work to achieve fairness in government and controlled growth in Chapel Hill.

"Special interests are no longer being favored. The people of Chapel Hill are now receiving equal treatment. We are beginning to plan the growth of Chapel Hill while safeguarding those things which make Chapel Hill a special place."

Smith joined the Chapel Hill School system in 1942 as a vocational teacher.

Except during his service in the Army in World War II, he has served the system since that date.

Smith taught industrial arts at Lincoln Junior-Senior High School until 1965 when the junior and senior high schools of the town were consolidated and integrated. He has taught auto mechanics for five years.

He was named assistant principal of the high school last August.

He has been a member of the Board of Alderman since 1965.

SG purchases stock in GM; backs campaign

by Jessica Hanchar
Staff Writer

Student Government bought two shares of General Motors (GM) stock Friday to express support for Campaign GM, a Washington-based consumer group which is trying to make General Motors responsible to its stockholders.

The stock, registered in the name of Student Government of UNC, was bought for $82 a share. The purchase from a Chapel Hill broker was made by a Student Legislature committee composed of Gerry Cohen, Richard Fox and Michael Padrick.

The move to buy stocks was authorized last month by Student Legislature. Legislators Gerry Cohen, Jim Bowman and Robert Grady introduced the bill to purchase the GM stock after the University indicated it was not willing to support Campaign GM proposals. The University holds a substantial amount of stock, thereby wielding voting power among the GM stockholders.

Student Legislatures will vote one of the shares in favor of the Campaign GM proposals. "The proposals are to require GM to make full disclosure of its anti-pollution effort, to put non-management candidates for the board of directors on management proxy and to expand the board by putting a consumer, an auto owner and a GM employe on it," explained Cohen.

The decision on how to vote the second share will be made in a referendum at the spring student elections March 16.

Student Government may send two students to the General Motors annual meeting in Detroit May 21 although this meeting falls during final exams.

Student Legislature urged the University to cast its shares at the stockholders' meeting in favor of the proposals of the Project on Corporate Responsibility when it approved the bill to buy the two shares.

The money for the stock purchase was obtained from the Student Government general surplus rather than from the University trust fund.

Dividends of $6.80 a year will be paid to the Student Government general surplus. The sale of the stock may later be ordered at the discretion of Student Legislature.

AMDS

Project Uplift to bring high school students here

The Committee for the Advancement of Minority and Disadvantaged Students (AMDS) will soon be sponsoring their annual undertaking, Project Uplift.

Project Uplift tries to interest disadvantaged North Carolina high school juniors in the University. With the cooperation of their administration and faculty, the committee brings the students to the University for a few days, lets them register for classes, and allows them to attend these for the duration of their stay. The groups will be here from Mar. 17-20, Apr. 14-17, and Apr. 21-24.

The program is structured this year to admit 300-350 high school juniors from 85 high schools. These students are chosen by their guidance counselors and required to submit an application. The requirements are that a student be from a minority or disadvantaged group (culturally, financially or economically), have not made a final decision to attend a school within the state university system, and have a 70 PSAT score.

Jim Hornstein, representative of AMDS, has requested that any student interested in acting as a guide for the program attend a special meeting today at 7:30 p.m. in the Carolina Union. Also, anybody who has not been contacted already and who resides in Morrison or James dormitories and will let an extra bed be placed in their room should attend the meeting.

Another project fostered by AMDS has been a committee to reexamine the admission criteria of the university. Presently they are considering a test of motivation, the OASIS test developed at the University of Michigan. Hornstein said the University Admissions Office had been receptive to admissions research using motivation tests.

In addition to Project Uplift, interested students may get involved in AMDS by calling the office in 252 Suite C of the Carolina Union, 968-6534, after 6 p.m.

For Chapel Hill

Sparrow new postmaster

Chapel Hill has a new postmaster—Richard W. Sparrow, who has been serving as officer in charge of the local mails since 1969.

The appointment was one of several announced Friday in Atlanta by T.J. Coleman, director of the southeastern postal region, which includes North Carolina.

Sparrow, a Chapel Hill native, is the husband of Mrs. Frances Sparrow, the director of the Student Activities Fund office, which handles the money for many campus organizations and groups.

Sparrow has been associated with the Chapel Hill Post Office since 1947, when he began his work as a letter carrier. He then moved to the position of clerk and then to the spot as foreman of the mails.

Sparrow was then appointed assistant postmaster for Chapel Hill. He served in that position until Postmaster Larry Parks retired from the postal service in 1969.

Sparrow served in the U.S. Army during World War II. He is currently a member of the University Methodist Church, the Chapel Hill Country Club, and was charter member of the Chapel Hill Jaycees.

He and Mrs. Sparrow reside on Farrington Road. They have two daughters.

Duke home-court whammy slays Heels again

by Chris Cobbs
Sports Editor

After a bitterly-contested Atlantic Coast Conference season settling nothing, you would expect the coaches of the league's top three teams to be anything but polite and reflective.

Wrong again. Dean Smith, Frank McGuire, and Bucky Waters traded verbal bouquets following Carolina's loss to Duke and USC's win over Wake Forest Saturday. "If Duke continues to play this well," said Smith after the Blue Devils' 92-83 triumph over his ACC regular season champs, "they can win the tournament."

McGuire had a different thought. "Dean should be on the way to the Eastern Regionals right now," quoth the man whose team was deprived of a similar opportunity by failing in last year's ACC tournament.

Only Waters reserved his primary attention for his own squad. "We played well—you have to in order to beat Carolina," he said. "This game was a fitting finish to our period of preparation for the tournament."

The Blue Devils, third place finishers with a 9-5 ACC mark, capped a strong first half of the season with two superb halves against Carolina. Duke shot 65 percent from the field in both periods and got outstanding afternoons from gargantuan Randy Denton and tiny Dick DeVenzio.

Denton muscled in 24 points and had 10 rebounds while DeVenzio handed out a remarkable 11 assists in addition to scoring six points.

They had generous assistance from Larry Saunders, Rick Katherman and Gary Melchionni with 17, 16 and 15 points respectively.

Their efforts were roundly applauded by Smith and Waters.

"I thought Duke played a tremendous game," commented Smith. "That DeVenzio was just sensational in the first half when he platted the ball just enough to get it past our men. He hurt our press more than anyone since we have been using it—and that includes UCLA."

Duke, heading for a first round tournament pairing with N.C. State in Greensboro Thursday, trailed 50-49 at the half Saturday, despite DeVenzio's heroics.

Carolina had a sparkling shooting half, making 60 percent from the floor. Dennis Wuycik and Bill Chamberlain had 11 points and George Karl 10.

The Tar Heels slumped after intermission, however. "Denton was hot—I haven't seen him play better," Smith remarked.

"And we were due for a bad shooting half. With the score tied 63-63, we missed six straight free throws and four good shots from the field."

The Devils seized at his opportunity to fashion a safe 78-65 lead with 5:58 remaining.

"We played as hard as we always do, but we will have to play harder from now on out," said Smith.

Wuycik and Chamberlain wound up with 18, Lee Dedmon with 15.

Carolina has a first round date with Clemson after finishing with a 20-5 overall and 11-3 conference record.

McGuire's Gamecocks, second place club with a 10-4 mark, meet Maryland as the annual blood-letting commences.

Most observers are figuring on a UNC-USC battle in the finals next Saturday night. But not Waters—necessarily.

"I'm proud of our team," he insisted. "We were 3-4 in the middle of December and since then we have won 15 of 18 and have not lost outside the conference."

"When the going was rough, this team stayed together."

He might, of course, have been referring to Carolina with that line. If so, he would have fallen right in with the leads of Smith and McGuire, whose flowery commentary served as an unusual prelude to the fierce tournament play ahead this week.
