DTH funding bill set for committee

by Doug Hall
Staff Writer

A bill prohibiting state universities from requiring students to pay for subscriptions to student publications is scheduled to come before the State Senate Higher Education Committee Tuesday.

The bill would require universities "to afford at least once a year, to every student, an opportunity to refuse to pay for or receive some or all of the student publications" financed through student activities fees.

A proportionate reduction of the student activities fee would be made if the student did not want the publication. The committee hearing was originally scheduled for next Tuesday but was postponed to allow supporters and opponents of the bill to prepare arguments.

State Sen. Julian Allsbrook (D-Halifax), who introduced the bill April 29, will present the bill to the committee and speak in its behalf.

UNC Student Body President Joe Stallings, Harry Bryan, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, and Consolidated University President William C. Friday have indicated they will be at the hearing.

"As I have stated before, I strongly oppose the Allsbrook bill on student newspapers," Stallings said. "This bill is nothing but legislative meddling in the internal affairs of the state's 16 institutions of higher education and is, therefore, improper."

Stallings said control of student fees at the current time is a trustee matter, "and any changes in student fees should be a matter for individual boards of trustees to handle."

The Board of Higher Education in Raleigh is conducting an in-depth study of student fees and bookstore operations at all state university campuses, Stallings said.

"I feel the Legislature should await this study before taking any action on student fees," he said.

Bryan said he plans to work against the bill because "if it should pass, it could mean the downfall of The Daily Tar Heel."

"The Daily Tar Heel has produced some of the best journalism in the country in its 79-year history, and I would hate to see that stopped," he said.

He said the same questions raised by Allsbrook were brought up in a student referendum at UNC last spring, which was defeated by more than 3,700 votes.

"I think this is a good indication of the student support of The Daily Tar Heel," Bryan said. "I hope all students will write their state legislators, asking them to support The Daily Tar Heel and vote against Sen. Allsbrook's bill."

Friday said he has not yet determined how far-reaching the bill would be and what publications it would include. "I want to find out what is really intended by the bill before I decide whether to oppose it," he said.

"However, I would urge that this kind of issue be left in the hands of the boards of trustees rather than subject to statutory action," Friday said.

Hadley Whittemore, president-elect of the junior class, is circulating a petition on the Chapel Hill campus, opposing the Allsbrook bill and the Coggin's bill banning visitation.

The petitions should be signed before the committee meets May 25 to show "the extent of student opposition to both these bills," said Cam West, special assistant to Stallings.

The incident which motivated Allsbrook to draft the bill was a story which appeared in the April 23 issue of the DTH. It discussed the activities and problems of homosexuals in Chapel Hill and was accompanied by a picture of two homosexuals embracing.

"I had been considering the bill since about two years ago when some students came to me and complained about articles in The Daily Tar Heel," Allsbrook said. "Finally, when the picture and story appeared, something had to be done about it."

"I thought it was as rank pornography as the public should be subjected to. It is not the type of material that should appear in a paper, and I don't think the students should be subjected to it."

Transfer waiver not permanent

by Pam Phillips
Staff Writer

The waiver of the Junior Transfer Policy may not be as permanent as was suggested by Dean James O. Cansler on Monday, according to Lee Hood Capps, co-chairman of the Junior Transfer Forum.

The decision to waive the requirement of junior transfers to reside in University housing was made by Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson for the 1971-72 school year.

Announcement of the decision was made by Associate Dean of Student Affairs Cansler, who said, "The residence requirement has not been changed."

However, according to Robert Kepner, director of the Office of Residence Life, "It is reasonable to assume that if a junior transfer policy is proposed for 1972-73, it will not be a reinstatement of the 1970-71 policy."

The 1970-71 policy prohibited junior transfer students from living off-campus except for specified reasons, such as residence in Chapel Hill with parents or residence with a spouse.

If the 1970-71 housing policy is reinstated, Kepner thinks, "The Forum's work was worthwhile. For if its recommendations are not used for transfer students they can be considered with regard to the sophomore housing policies."

According to Dean Cansler, there are three considerations regarding the junior transfer policy. They are whether to continue to waive the policy, whether to reinstate the old policy, and under what conditions will it be reinstated.

The previous reason given by the Administration for the purpose of a junior transfer housing policy was for the educational advantages of residence life.

The policy is scheduled to be reviewed sometime during the next academic year. Included in the waiver statement was the addition of two students to the Residence Housing Appeals Board. One of these positions is to be filled by the president of the junior class. Lee Capps will serve until June 1, when vice president of the junior class, Cecil Miller will begin serving throughout the summer. At the beginning of the next year, Hadley Whittemore, president-elect of the junior class will take office.

The other member is to be a representative from the Residence College Federation (RCF) and of the opposite sex.

Steve Saunders, chairman of RCF, commented, "I am happy the requirement was waived for transfers. I am disappointed though that it was only done as a stop-gap measure and not on a permanent basis. The RCF will continue to work next year to abolish permanently the required residency for both sophomore and junior transfers."

Capps, co-chairman of the Junior Transfer Forum, also expressed disappointment at the decision.

He said, "Considering the recommendations and work of the Forum, I think a decision of permanency for the junior transfer housing should have been rendered."

Concerning a comment by Cansler that the abolition of the junior transfer requirement would result in a "suitcase college," Capps said, "I consider such an assumption baseless. More than 50 per cent of the student body resides off-campus. I feel that students seek off-campus housing for economic, social and environmental reasons."

SL will again consider bill for summer lawyer

by Woody Doster
Staff Writer

Student Legislature will consider the bill to provide for legal counsel over the summer months at tonight's 7 o'clock meeting.

Consideration of the bill was prevented at a special session Monday night and last Thursday's regular session because of objections from the floor.

At the special session, the Finance Committee was instructed to consider the bill and to report it out of committee tonight.

Asking Legislature to consider the bill Monday night, Legislator Gerry Cohen said, "This bill will allow a lawyer to consider some crucial issues that may come up this summer, when students have gone home."

He cited the "attacks" against The Daily Tar Heel and the University's visitation policy in the N.C. General Assembly, which will be in session through the summer.

In addition, there will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the University, "in which the students need representation."

"I think this bill has adequate safeguards to prevent any unethical spending of the money," Cohen continued.

The primary objection to consideration of the bill was made by Legislator Landon Shuff, also a member of the Graduate and Professional Student Federation (GPSF).

He fears the lawyer may be used against the graduate students, who are attempting to break away from Student Government.

Shuff pointed out that as graduate students supply "about one third" of the student fees, they would also be paying one third of the lawyer's retainer.

"I believe the Legislature should reexamine the issue very carefully," he said. "The budget appropriation for Student Government legal counsel was discussed for several meetings before it was approved. This bill is asking us to abdicate control over something that we considered so carefully."

He said the provisions put in the original appropriation required that SL would hire the lawyer and decide what he would consider.

With the bill under discussion, a vote of four out of five of the members of the Summer School Governing Board could hire the lawyer and decide his functions for the summer.

"The idea of the Executive Branch seems to be use the lawyer as much as you can while there is no control over him," Shuff stated. "He could be used to gather arguments against the GPSF, when we are paying part of his salary."

"If I could be sure that anyone associated with Student Government had access to the information gathered by the lawyer, I would not be opposed to the bill," he continued.

Parnell, Grimes selected Tar Heel, Quarterly editors set

by Jessica Hancher
Staff Writer

Mike Parnell, managing editor of The Daily Tar Heel, was chosen editor for the summer Tar Heel at a Publications Board meeting Wednesday.

Julian Grimes, business manager of the Carolina Quarterly, was chosen editor of the literary magazine for the academic year 1971-72.

Parnell was selected over Terry Cheek, a former staff member for The Daily Tar Heel. Grimes was chosen without competition.

Parnell said he has "several plans for improving the paper. I hope to make the paper more inviting in appearance than it has been in past years. The paper is in tabloid form, which is more accessible to magazine layout than the regular newspaper, and I think the paper needs innovative layout in order to be appealing."

"There are more students now attending summer school than have attended in the past years," he continued. "I feel The Tar Heel must have good coverage of the campus if it is to serve the students in the manner in which they deserve."

"There are more things done by the Administration during the summer than most students realize," Parnell added. "The Tar Heel intends to uncover what is happening."

Grimes said he plans to involve more undergraduates with the Quarterly. He expects to improve the magazine by expanding the photography and including occasional profiles on contemporary literary figures.

In presenting his case before Pub Board, Grimes pointed out he would represent continuity on the magazine. He noted circulation of the magazine was growing and that it is being read across the country.

In other Pub Board decisions Wednesday, a transfer of funds within the WCAR radio budget to pay two salaries was denied.
