The General College and the College of Arts and Sciences, two basic academic structures of the University, offer to undergraduates more than 1,500 courses in 30 departments.

All freshmen and sophomores, except those in the Schools of Nursing and Pharmacy and in the Dental Hygiene curriculum, are enrolled in the General College.

Juniors and seniors seeking courses leading to the Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Music, and Bachelor of Fine Arts degrees are enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Raymond H. Dawson is dean of both the General College and the College of Arts and Sciences. John K. Nelson, associate dean, and Donald Jicha, assistant dean, help Dawson administer affairs in the General College. Frank M. Duffey is associate dean and Gordon B. Cleveland is assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Students' academic advisors in the General College and the College of Arts and Sciences have offices in South Building.

Advisors in the General College are matched to the student according to his intended major. Most departments of the University, including many not affiliated with the College of Arts and Sciences, are represented in the General College advisor system.

The student may transfer from the General College to an upper college during or after four semesters with a quality point average of 1.5 or higher. Upper colleges include the College of Arts and Sciences, School of Journalism, School of Education, and School of Business Administration. Students majoring in Pharmacy may transfer to the Pharmacy program after one year in the General College.

Students who choose to enroll in the College of Arts and Sciences may study in Special Curricula leading to professional study in law, dentistry, medicine, and medical technology and to more specialized bachelor degrees.

Departments under the College of Arts and Sciences and the General College are organized into the Division of Fine Arts, the Division of the Humanities, the Division of the Natural Sciences, and the Division of the Social Sciences.

Fine arts departments are art, dramatic art, music and radio, television and motion pictures.

Departments under the humanities division are classics, English, Germanic languages, history, linguistics, Slavic and Oriental languages, philosophy, religion, and Romance languages. Special curricula under the humanities offer courses in comparative literature and American studies.

Students transferring from the General College may enroll in the School of Business Administration, the School of Education or the School of Journalism if they do not wish to enter the College of Arts and Sciences.

A 1.5 quality point average over four semesters in the General College is necessary to allow transfer to any upper college.

Students completing the Business Administration major studies receive the Bachelor of Science in Business Administration. Programs in the School of Education lead to Bachelor of Science or Bachelor of Arts depending upon the student's subject speciality. Study in the School of Journalism leads to the Bachelor of Arts in Journalism.

Graduate programs leading to masters and Ph.D. degrees are available in all three upper schools.

Dean Maurice W. Lee and Claude S. George, associate dean, conduct administrative affairs in the School of Business Administration, which dates back to 1919.

The 58-year-old School of Education is headed by Dean Norton L. Beach, Roy E. Harkin, associate dean for undergraduates, and Neal H. Tracy, associate dean for graduates.

John B. Adams is dean of the School of Journalism. The University's journalism courses have been organized as a school since 1950.

Approximately 700 undergraduates are enrolled in the School of Business Administration. The journalism school hosts about 200 students. More than 875 students will be enrolled in the School of Education this fall.

The business school offers a total of more than 130 courses, of which more than 50 are open to undergraduates. The School of Journalism has about 25 courses open to undergraduates and about 10 specified for graduate study.

The School of Education has a total of more than 175 courses available. About 75 education courses are open to undergraduates. Several courses are available to both graduates and undergraduates in the school's program in Recreation Administration.
