

Grad schools attract students

by Susan Miller
Staff Writer

Students seeking graduate degrees in non-health related fields may study in the School of Law, the School of Library Science, the School of Social Work and the Graduate School.

The School of Law, begun in 1843, offers a three-year program leading to the law degree. The school is headed by Dean Dickson Phillips and Associate Dean Morris R. Gelblum.

Graduate study in the 40-year-old

School of Library Science leads to the master's degree. Undergraduate courses lead to certification for positions as librarians in public schools. Ray L. Carpenter is acting dean until January when Edward G. Holley will take charge of the school's administrative affairs.

The School of Social Work offers curricula leading to the Master of Social Work. The school was renamed in 1950 from the earlier School of Public Welfare, which was established in 1920. The acting dean is Alan Keith-Lucas; associate dean is H. H. Hollingsworth.

The Graduate School allows advanced study toward the master's and Ph.D. degree in many disciplines. In 1903, the Graduate School gained distinct status and is now headed by Dean and Vice Chancellor Lyle V. Jones and Associate Dean Paul S. Hubbard.

Health schools enroll more than 2,000

The Division of Health Sciences of the University offers to graduate and undergraduate students study in the School of Dentistry, the School of Medicine, the School of Nursing, the School of Pharmacy and the School of Public Health.

C. Arden Miller is vice chancellor of the division.

The School of Medicine, begun in 1879, is headed by Christopher C. Fordham III. More than 360 students are enrolled in the school.

Lucy H. Conant is dean of the School of Nursing. The 20-year-old school hosts about 350 students.

George Hager is dean and Leroy Werley is associate dean of the School of Pharmacy, in operation since 1897. The school has more than 600 students.

The School of Public Health, part of the School of Medicine from 1936 until 1962 when it moved into its own building, is administered by Dean William Fred Mayes and Associate Dean Charles Harper. Approximately 500 students are enrolled.

The School of Dentistry offers an undergraduate curriculum leading to the D.D.S. degree. There are graduate programs in several speciality areas. An undergraduate program in dental hygiene is also available.

Fifteen departments are under the medical school: anaesthesiology, anatomy, bacteriology, biochemistry, family medicine, medicine, obstetrics and gynecology, ophthalmology, pathology, pharmacology, physiology, pediatrics, psychiatry, radiology and surgery.

The School of Public Health is comprised of 10 departments: biostatistics, environmental sciences and engineering, epidemiology, health administration, health education, maternal and child care, mental health, parasitology and laboratory practice, public health nursing and public health nutrition.

100 courses

Correspondence study offered

For people unable to attend college courses on campus, the option of working at their own pace and free from travel is offered by the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction.

Correspondence courses, part of the University of North Carolina Extension Division, may be taken for undergraduate credit or just to pursue a special interest. Students taking such courses have 13 months from their individual enrollment date in which to complete work.

Approximately 100 courses are offered through correspondence. Some of the more popular courses are dental assisting (non-credit), education, North Carolina history, accounting, psychology, and sociology.

In addition to undergraduate courses, non-credit programs in dental assisting, dental technology, and vocational rehabilitation counseling are offered.

Remedial work is available in math and English.

Further information on correspondence study may be obtained at the Bureau offices, 115 Abernathy Hall, or by writing to the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, University of North Carolina Extension Division, Chapel Hill, for a catalogue.
