Duke begins classes Tuesday

Approximately 8,100 students will begin classes Tuesday at Duke University. Duke will be opening the new year with its largest student registration in history except for the World War II years when military schools on campus boosted the enrollment.

Included are about 1,450 freshmen who arrived last Thursday to begin orientation activities.

Except for the Divinity School and the School of Nursing, all graduate and undergraduate programs have marked increases in enrollment over last fall's totals. With more than 1,000 faculty members, however, Duke is maintaining its faculty-student ratio of approximately 1-8 over-all and 1-10 in its undergraduate programs.

Tuesday's opening of classes ushers the university into a new academic calendar. The earlier start will enable the students to put exams and term papers behind them before Christmas vacation Exams had previously been held after the vacation.

The new calendar also will mean a longer Christmas vacation. Students will have from 24 to 28 days, depending on their exams. Spring semester classes will begin Jan. 17.

Baccalaureate and graduation exercises, previously held on successive days, are both scheduled for May 14.

Growth and change of various sorts will be in evidence on the Duke campus. Approximately $22 million in new construction is either under way or soon to be contracted. The largest projects are a new medical sciences building, a recreation center and additions to the Divinity and Engineering Schools.

A new housing arrangement has created three residential federations. Two federations will be on the West Campus, which previously housed only male students. The other is on the formerly all-female East Campus.

Each federation will be composed of four to six dormitories. The federations will house from 350 to 500 students each.

A smaller number of students will live in three alternate-plan dorms in which men and women will occupy separate floors or sections. The remainder of the student body will reside in all-male or all-female dorms or will live off-campus.

The plan is an experiment to be evaluated annually, with the final evaluation scheduled in three years.

Approximately 20 per cent of the students hail from North Carolina. Students from all 50 states and about 35 foreign countries are enrolled.

Among the student body will be 114 National Merit Scholars from all parts of the country. Many other students will be attending the university on scholarships or fellowships.

Financial relief will also come to a smaller number of students under a new plan known as a deferred tuition plan. It will allow 100 to 150 upperclassmen and graduate students to delay paying portions of their tuition until after they graduate.

These students will be extended loans to be repaid on a percentage of their annual salaries. Duke is the second university in the nation to adopt a deferred tuition plan, following Yale University.

Bicycle riding has caught on big with college students across the nation, and it's no different at UNC. Bikes are handy for getting to and around campus, besides, what's more fun than two on a bicycle built for one? (Staff photo by Cliff Kolosov)

News around campus

AWS slates first meeting

Association of Women Students (AWS) will hold its first meeting tonight at 6:45 p.m. in the Student Union. All elected members and interested persons are invited to attend.

The meeting will acquaint members with projects planned for the coming year, said AWS President Cathy Cauthorne.

Committees will be formed to coordinate AWS activities.

Ideas and plans for Women's Week, Oct. 4-8, will be discussed. Already on the program is a speech by self-defense expert Frederic Storaska, a defense rally, a film concerning working women and a panel discussion by prominent Chapel Hill women.

Other projects to be discussed at the meeting include a spring follow-up to Women's Week. The spring program will deal with the place of women in careers and professions.

AWS members will also plan a project to help provide needed equipment and volunteer help to area day-care centers. Miss Cauthorne described tonight's meeting as an "orientation and organizational meeting to plan this year's activities."

Course offered in counseling

A two-semester, non-credit course designed to aid ministers with marriage and family counseling will be offered this fall by UNC's School of Social Work and the Division of Community Adult Education.

Deadline for course registration, which begins Sept. 15, is Sept. 8. Information concerning the course is available at the Division of Community Adult Education office, 218 Abernethy Hall.

Classes will be held from 9 to 11 a.m. Wednesdays at New Hope Presbyterian Church.

UNC chooses property officer

Mrs. Leo W. Wagoner, employee of UNC's Business Affairs Division for the past 11 years, has been named University property officer.

The property officer is in charge of all transactions involving leasing of property by or to the University, said Vice Chancellor Joseph C. Eagles, who announced the appointment.

Mrs. Wagoner, a UNC graduate, is also in charge of acquisition and disposition of University property.

She will also serve as coordinator for the division of business affairs.

Non-credit piano offered by UNC

A non-credit course for piano teachers will be offered this fall by UNC's Extension Division in cooperation with the Raleigh Piano Teachers Association.

Interested teachers should enroll and pay a $30 course fee at the Community Adult Education office, 218 Abernethy Hall.

The course is taught by Marvin Blickenstaff, assistant professor and chairman of piano instruction in UNC's Department of Music. It has 18 hours of instruction.

Certificates will be awarded teachers who attend regularly and complete assignments. The course will count toward certification by the N.C. Music Teachers Association.
