Faculty to probe death of Arnold

by Mike Parnell
Managing Editor

A report on a faculty committee investigation into the death of UNC football player Bill Arnold will be presented at the next meeting of the Faculty Council October 8.

Dr. Dan Okun, chairman of the Faculty Council, said Sunday the investigation was initiated to "dispell rumors" surrounding the death of Arnold, who died as the result of a heat stroke suffered during a UNC football practice.

Arnold died last Tuesday from liver and kidney complications which occurred as a result of the heat stroke he suffered September 6.

The Faculty Council Committee on Athletics will make the investigation and will report to the Faculty Council a week from Friday.

Dr. Ed Hedgpeth, chairman of the committee and former director of the Student Health Service, said Sunday the committee has not yet begun its probe.

He refused comment on how the committee plans to conduct the investigation and said none of the committee's findings would be made public before the October 8 meeting of the Faculty Council.

The decision to make the investigation was made last Tuesday at the regular meeting of the Faculty Council Agenda Committee.

"Many of our faculty members have expressed concern about the events that led to Arnold's death," Okun said. "There have been a lot of rumors."

"We felt it better to have a factual report and that's what we told the committee."

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson declined comment Sunday on the committee investigation, but the Daily Tar Heel learned the chancellor will release a statement today on the Arnold case.

Head Coach Bill Dossy were unavailable for comment Sunday.

Student Body President Joe Stallings said, "In view of the seriousness of the matter and in view of the many questions that have created doubt about the facts of the tragedy, I feel there should be a thorough investigation of the facts in the case and that any necessary action should be taken to prevent this type of tragedy from reoccurring."

"I am not requesting the demise of athletics at Carolina," Stallings said, "but I do feel that the University has an obligation to itself, the state and to its athletes to fairly resolve the matter."

Stallings said he is pleased that the Agenda Committee called for the investigation, but he thought the investigation would be more thorough if students were represented on the Committee on Athletics.

"There is no doubt about students' concern that this matter be handled fairly," he said, "for I have received a great many phone calls requesting an investigation."

Aldermen meet today

Building permits head agenda

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen, meeting in public hearing tonight, will consider special use requests for a service station, a fraternity house and a drive-in bank window.

Meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall courtroom, the board will hear from representatives of Humble Oil Co., Delta Upsilon fraternity and North Carolina National Bank (NCNB).

Humble Oil has submitted a second request for a special use permit to build a service station on West Franklin Street between Merritt Mill Road and South Graham Street.

The Board of Adjustments refused the company's first request last spring on the grounds that the traffic generated would endanger public health and safety, and the station would not be in harmony with the future planned development of Chapel Hill.

Delta Upsilon, located at Hillsborough and Rosemary streets, has requested a permit for a new fraternity house. The fraternity plans to construct a new house on the site of its present quarters.

The Community Appearance Commission voted last Monday to recommend to the aldermen a new design be requested for the proposed house. The commission did not think the proposed house was in harmony with the character of the surrounding development.

Sam Longiotti, president of branch buildings and developer of the NCNB plaza, has also requested a special use permit for a drive-in bank window on the first deck of the three-story parking structure.

The aldermen are expected to consider an ordinance which would prohibit automobiles from stopping or standing on certain sections of North Columbia Street.

The ordinance, recommended by the Chapel Hill Street Committee, is expected to curb hitch-hiking in this area. Several accidents have occurred on North Columbia Street as a result of cars stopping to pick up hitch-hikers.

The town's newly-hired dog warden, Gus Shoffner, will also present recommendations Monday for a new dog control program.

The aldermen have specifically requested recommendations on the use of county pound facilities, ordinances which should be adopted and the type of equipment needed.

Nader raider to speak

GPSF Senate to meet

The Graduate and Professional Student Federation (GPSF) Senate will meet tonight to consider consumer protection proposals, out-of-state tuition and GPSF separation.

Brent English, an associate of consumer advocate Ralph Nader, is expected to present his proposed $1.50 increase per semester in student fees at the 7:30 p.m. meeting in the Student Union. The money would be used to hire a full-time staff of advocates trained in various areas of societal problems to represent UNC students.

Daisy Junge, GPSF President, will then present plans for achieving separation from undergraduate student government.

The GPSF has attempted to establish a separate graduate student government for the last year and a half.

They are currently recognized only as a semi-independent governing agency.

"I think we are going to resubmit necessary constitutional amendments to the Student Legislature, asking that a referendum be held to allow the student body to decide this issue," said Jim Becker, presiding officer of GPSF.

"We wanted to have a referendum last year, and were disappointed when this did not materialize," he said.

The graduate senate is also expected to consider a resolution concerning the recent non-resident tuition hike, which will be sent to a number of North Carolina legislators.

"We are going to send out letters to Carl Smith (Orange County Representative) and others, complaining that they have not represented the interests of a significant number of their constituency," Becker said and added: "If there is no way to persuade our alleged representatives to change their action on this matter, then we will have to punish them at the ballot box."

According to Becker, Carolina Against Tuition, a group of concerned UNC students, will combine their efforts with the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) in Greensboro.

The Greensboro ACLU has already filed an injunction challenging the tuition hikes and the new residency requirements which were included in the legislation.

Carolina Against Tuition will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Greenlaw.

Phone meeting lacks attendance

by Norman Black

The Chapel Hill Telephone Company held a public meeting Thursday night, attended only by two customers, to discuss plans for upgrading phone service in the area.

The two subscribers, outnumbered five to one at the meeting by company employees and University officials, were the only customers present from the 250-square-mile exchange area.

All multi-party lines would be systematically converted to single-party service, and mileage fees currently being charged customers living outside the base rate area would be eliminated under the improvement plans.

The improvements, expected to cost $1.5 million in new equipment and plants, has been projected for completion in December, 1974.

Plant Manager L.M. Miller was not upset with the lack of attendance.

"I would like to interpret that as an indication that the people have confidence that their telephone company and the State Utilities Commission aren't going to allow anything that isn't in the best interest of the public."

Commercial Engineer Gary McKelvey agreed with Miller.

"We never did consider this much of a controversy," McKelvey said. "The State Utilities Commission suggested we hold a public hearing, so we did. We did receive some public sentiment expressed by those two people, however."

The two customers in attendance, Bill and Judy Schenck, reported they would like to continue to have the option of buying the cheaper two-party service, rather than convert to a one-party system.

McKelvey explained the utilities commission had established a general goal for all companies of providing exchange-wide, one-party service without mileage charges, regardless of the characteristics of the exchange area.

The Chapel Hill company will come under commission regulation in January, 1973.

After the improvements are completed, all subscribers in the exchange, which serves southern Orange and northern Chatham counties, will have private lines and will pay a standard $6.50 monthly service charge.

Conversion of lines within two miles of the Franklin Street post office will be completed at the end of next year.

Phones within four miles of the post office will be converted by December, 1973, with all rural lines being converted by the end of 1974.

McKelvey said he did not foresee substantial fiscal change for the utilities company.

"With all customers paying $6.50, the conversion will bring savings to many one-party customers in outlying areas who have previously paid substantial mileage fees," McKelvey said, adding: "The conversion will mean larger monthly payments for all multi-party customers in the exchange. We do not project that the total economic picture of our company will change as a result of this program."

Officials reported the $1.5 million would be raised through bond sales, and any rated increases in the future would affect all subscribers equally.

Toronto group names chairman

Anne Queen

Anne Queen, chairman of the UNC YM-YWCA, has been named honorary chairman of the 1971-72 Toronto Exchange.

Edith Davis, co-chairman of the exchange, described the honorary chairman as a "guiding light" for the program.

The Toronto Exchange is a cultural and social exchange program involving students from the University of Toronto and 30 UNC students.

The Canadians will visit Chapel Hill Nov. 4-9, and UNC students will travel to Toronto during Christmas vacation.

"We try to choose an outstanding member of the University community to serve as honorary chairman," Miss Davis said. She added Miss Queen has been helpful in virtually every activity on campus.

Miss Queen has helped in acquiring speakers on campus for such groups as the Carolina Symposium and the Carolina Forum, Miss Davis continued.

"We asked Miss Queen to be honorary chairman because of her interest in past activities of the exchange and because we admire and respect her as a friend and as an advisor," Miss Davis explained.

A native of Heywood County in western North Carolina, Miss Queen has been a member of the Y staff for 15 years. She is especially interested in Y activities concerning international affairs.

Miss Queen worked in a western N.C. paper mill for 11 years before attending Berea College in Berea, Ky.

"When I went to Berea, I actually wanted to come here," Miss Queen said. "Ever since I've known much about UNC, I've had a deep feeling for what it is and for what it has done for the state."

After receiving her A.B. from Berea, Miss Queen went to Yale for theological training where she earned a Bachelor of Divinity degree.

She worked with the American Friends Service Committee and as assistant campus chaplain at the University of Georgia before coming to Chapel Hill.

In her capacity as Toronto Exchange honorary chairman, she will be connected with the goals and activities of the program and provide a sort of authority for the group which is otherwise run solely by students.

"I've followed the exchange since its beginning, and I believe that any serious effort to bring people together across cultures is very good," Miss Queen said.

She believes the exchange has matured in its confrontation of important issues over the past several years.

"Even a short-term exchange such as the Toronto Exchange contributes to international understanding," Miss Queen said.

The students from Toronto and the UNC members of the exchange will be entertained by Miss Queen during the Canadians' visit.
