The Student Government (SG) reorganization commission will be conducting experimental open discussion sessions in three dormitories today.

NCCU student paper sues university head

by Evans Witt Staff Writer

The president of North Carolina Central University in Durham, who cut off funds to the NCCU student newspaper, has been charged in federal court with violating freedom of the press.

Several staff members of The Campus Echo, the bi-monthly student newspaper, filed suit Friday in U.S. District Court in Greensboro, charging President Albert N. Whiting with unlawfully terminating university financial support for The Echo.

"Really the whole issue now is whether the students have the right to criticize administration policies in what is supposed to be a student paper," Jae Joyner, editor of The Echo, said Sunday.

Whiting would not comment on the suit when contacted Monday by The Daily Tar Heel. He did say he had

He would also not comment any be able to maintain its black identity. nor on the actions of the paper which brought about the cut-off of funds.

The issue of administration censorship of the paper has been a sore point for NCCU students since the beginning of the school year, Joyner said.

One of his first moves this year as editor, Joyner said, was to refuse to submit the newspaper's stories and editorials to the administration for approval prior to publication.

The first issue of the paper, distributed on Sept. 20, caused Whiting to cut off funds to the paper, according to Joyner. He said the issue was centered on the question "Is NCCU still a black institution?"

Stories and editorials in the issue discussed a recent fund drive by the University in which most of the further on the issues involved in the suit under a new state university structure was also discussed in the issue.

> Among the policies the paper announced in its first issue was the refusal to accept any advertising from a white business which does not employ persons on an equal opportunity basis.

> When Whiting cut off its funds, he denounced the first issue of the paper as espousing racially discriminatory sentiments.

> "North Carolina Central University has always been opposed to any policies and practices which deprive any individual of a right or privilege because of race, color, creed or national origin," he said last week.

> He also asid NCCU would not support. recognize or affiliate with any group which expounds a policy of racial discrimination.

Nader tickets remain

About 2,200 tickets have been sold for consumer advocate Ralph Nader's appearance here Thursday evening.

Almost 2,000 of those sold have been purchased by Chapel Hill students, with the remainder sold on surrounding college campuses, according to Carolina Forum Chairman Chris Sawyer.

Nader will speak in Carmichael Auditorium at 8 p.m. Thursday.

Tickets for the speech may be purchased for $1 at the Carolina Union information desk from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily.

Nader's speech is the first in a series of appearances by major national figures sponsored by the Forum and the School of Public Health.

Joyner said Whiting had given the paper two alternatives-change its policies and written constitution or sever all official connections with the university. Whiting said the paper "should develop a written statement clarifying the role of the publication, the standards to be used in its evaluation and the limitations on external control."

"He also suggested incorporating the paper off-campus," Joyner said. "But that would accomplish exactly what he wants-to kill the paper."

Joyner expects to publish another issue of the paper a week from today. Some results from the federal court suit are anticipated by that time, he said.

DTH photographer Cliff Kolovson took this shot by lining up a light in the Carolina Union parking lot with the Bell Tower in the distance.
