Stallings commends trustees

Student Body President Joe Stallings commended Tuesday the UNC Board of Trustees for placing Consolidated University student body presidents on standing committees Monday.

He disagreed with the trustees' decisions not to place a student on the Executive Committee.

"It was a move in the right direction to put students on the standing committees," Stallings said Tuesday.

Stallings and N.C. State University Student Body President Gus Gusler were placed on the Visiting Committee. Other student body presidents were placed on other standing committees.

"But student representation should also be on the Executive Committee since most decisions concerning the Consolidated University are made there," Stallings added.

The Executive Committee, composed of 15 members of the 106-member Board of Trustees, makes many of the preliminary decisions concerning what the board will bring up for discussion.

"I feel it is important to accept student input in fact as well as symbolically," Stallings said.

He suggested a student could be placed as an ex-officio member of the Executive Committee. "Student body presidents are not in office for as long as a regular trustee term," he explained.

The N.C. General Assembly will meet in special session Tuesday to decide the reorganization of higher education.

"I realize there will be a new University structure coming out of the legislative action next week," Stallings said. "I hope there will be some provision for student representation on the new structure."

Liberal caucus forms at UNC

An organizational meeting to form a liberal caucus for the upcoming Student Legislature elections will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Student Union, according to Legislators Alen Nagle and Gerry Cohen.

Nagle said his and Cohen's idea of holding a convention in order to form a liberal party on campus is the first such attempt in several years.

"We hope the meeting will facilitate communication among the liberally oriented people on campus," Nagle said.

"Anyone of liberal persuasion interested in running during the fall election should attend the meeting.

"By organizing a party and forming a coalition of interests, we hope to come up with a substantive program and not merely something amorphous."

The meeting is open to anyone interested in running for legislature.

"There is the possibility of a huge turnover in legislature this fall," Nagle said. "Thirty seats, which is half of those in the legislature, are now open."

Fall elections will be held Nov. 9. The deadline for filing party nominations to run for legislature is Wednesday midnight.

Visit to U.N. planned by 'Y'

The YM-YWCA International Affairs Committee announced Tuesday tentative plans for a trip to the United Nations around the end of semester break in January.

All interested students are invited to participate in the trip, which will last from four to six days. Bus travel and midtown lodging at reasonable cost, a program of several days at the UN building and free time for shopping and the theatre have been tentatively scheduled.

Committee members expressed their concern at the generally uninformed view of the UN held by the average University student. They said four program topics are presently open to the group: China in the UN, the problems of South Africa, the UN and the environment and the problems of developing nations.

One of these topics will be selected shortly to be the basis of a series of on-campus briefings, discussions and meetings to provide background information for the trip.

The first announcement of the UNC project coincides with the celebration of United Nations Day, Oct. 24.

Ga. debaters win tourney

University of Georgia debaters defeated William and Mary University last weekend to win the Tar Heel Invitational Debate Tournament.

The Georgia team, Richard Bethea and Margaret Snyder, arguing the negative, took a 6-1 decision in the case on placing minority percentages on juries.

Two UNC debate teams, Cole Campbell and Key Kernode and Harold and Harvey Kennedy, were eliminated in the octo-finals.

This year's tournament was larger than last year's, with 66 teams from 42 schools.

John Saxon, a member of the University of Alabama team, coached by former UNC debate coach Cully Clark, was named first speaker.

The Tar Heels will travel to the University of Georgia in Athens Oct. 29 to compete in the American Classic Invitational Debates (ACID). Only the top U.S. teams are invited to this debate, "the ACID test."

The ACID test is a warm-up for the Peachtree Debate Tournament at Emory University, one of the largest tournaments. This debate is the first national qualifying tournament for Joe Loveland and Joe McGuire this year. A win will insure a bid to the National Invitational Debate.

Loveland and McGuire won the Peachtree Debates last year.

John Kerry talk slated at UNC-G

Decorated Vietnam veteran John Kerry will speak Oct. 25 on the role of the veteran in American life at UNC-G.

The Veterans' Day address, open to the public, is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Aycock Auditorium.

Robert Priscoll, spokesman for the sponsoring N.C. Committee to End the War in Indochina, said, "There is a deepening sense of patriotism among many veterans."

"No one articulates this position better than John Kerry," he added.

Kerry attained national recognition last spring after his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He maintained many U.S. soldiers were ashamed to be involved in a civil war in which "most people didn't even know the difference between communism and democracy."

A 1966 graduate of Yale University, Kerry has received three Purple Hearts, the Silver Star and the Bronze Star.
