

Between September, Thanksgiving

RCF proposes 2-day holiday

by Jessica Hanchar Staff Writer

The Residence College Federation (RCF) recommended Wednesday a two-day holiday between the beginning of school and Thanksgiving at its last meeting of the semester.

RCF also passed a resolution urging each residence college to fund the Black Student Movement's (BSM) Afro-American Social Committee during the spring semester.

The calendar proposal, sent to University Provost J.C. Morrow, stated, "Students are overly fatigued by the first 12 straight weeks of school and unduly rushed during the final two weeks."

Morrow replied it would be helpful for RCF to look at the entire fall semester calendar and see if the rest of the semester schedule is good rather than to look at just one aspect of the calendar.

Morrow has forwarded the RCF resolution to the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on the Calendar and suggested RCF send revised suggestions to the committee in January.

In the resolution, RCF said, "Twelve straight weeks of classes without a break has put more pressure and stress on students than ever before."

"We are asking that the calendar committee evaluate the current set-up and consider the possibility of providing some break before Thanksgiving, even if it is only a three-day weekend."

A copy has been sent to Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Steve Saunders, RCF chairman, emphasized RCF is not asking to go back to the old calendar. "We are just suggesting something like an extra holiday, maybe on University Day," he said.

The resolution concerning black social committees in residence colleges sets funding at $1 per black student in each residence college.

The resolution suggests a plan similar to one begun by James Residence College last year.

"Both Charlie Miller (governor of James) and members of the BSM have agreed the program there has been successful," Saunders said.

He said all residence colleges have a responsibility for programs for blacks. "James is not the only one that should meet obligations for blacks on campus," Saunders said.

Saunders admitted residence college social programs have generally not reached the blacks. "We will continue our efforts to have programs for blacks out of the regular social money too," he said.

The program would be reviewed jointly by RCF and BSM at the end of next semester.

ECOS files suit against new dam; judge deliberating

An ECOS suit protesting the New Hope Dam construction by the Army Corps of Engineers in Chatham County was heard Wednesday by Judge Erwin Stanley of Greensboro Middle District Court.

ECOS, the Conservation Council of North Carolina (CCNC), CCNC President James C. Wallace, and three residents of the dam area joined together to sue the Army Corps of Engineers.

The ecology groups charge the corps violated the Environmental Policy Act of 1969 by not filing a complete environmental impact statement before beginning the construction.

Both sides presented their arguments and evidence at the Wednesday hearing, then the judge said he would notify both parties after he considered the case.

Watson Morris, UNC Ecos office manager, said the judge will probably take two or three months because of the technical nature of the controversy.

The conservationists alone presented 26 documents and studies for consideration. Col. Albert Costanzo, a Corps spokesman, was subpoenaed to authenticate the Army documents.

Two officials from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) were also called to testify for the ecology groups.

Several towns and counties located below the dam site on the Cape Fear River asked to be listed as co-defendants, charging they will be damaged if the dam is not built. They were accepted and gave evidence to support their statements.

Ron Outen, an ECOS member who attended the hearing said, "We're not really suing to stop the dam. That's not even mentioned in our brief. We just want it to be re-examined according to law. Then I think it will be clear the dam shouldn't be built."

PIRG receives support from students at Duke

by Ellen Gilliam Staff Writer

Duke University students voted Wednesday to support the N.C. Public Interest Research Group (PIRG), establishing the state's first PIRG chapter at Duke.

Financial funding of the consumer protection group was approved in a five-issue referendum.

Mrs. Sharon Guisinger, PIRG co-chairman for media publicity at UNC, said the PIRG issue passed "overwhelmingly" at Duke, with 89 per cent of all students who voted in the referendum voting in favor of the organization.

According to Mrs. Guisinger, 32 per cent of the Duke student body voted in the referendum. Of the 1,587 people voting, 1,386 voted for PIRG, 163 against and 38 abstained.

Organizational procedures for PIRG are currently under way on five N.C. campuses: Duke, UNC, UNC-G, State and Meredith. Wake Forest also has a small group. The ultimate goal of the organization is to establish a state-wide interest group with professional advisors and field workers.

PIRG at UNC, UNC-G and State cannot be officially established until the recently elected board of governors for the University of North Carolina approves its present organization, Mrs. Guisinger said.

Each college or university presently considering PIRG will circulate petitions among its student body before April, at which time the results will be presented to the governing board for approval. The final decision cannot be reached before July 1 when the governing board is officially activated.

"The petition at UNC will be circulated in the early spring and then we will decide whether or not to hold a referendum," Mrs. Guisinger said. She said UNC-G is petitioning now and has had very favorable results so far.

PIRG is currently a reality in two states - Minnesota and Oregon - with professionals already considering and researching issues.

According to Mrs. Guisinger, between 20 and 25 states are trying to organize PIRG groups patterned after the Oregon and Minnesota groups.

Neighborhood House sponsors barbecue

Neighborhood House, a Chapel Hill center to advance racial interaction, will sponsor a barbecue dinner from 4 to 7 p.m. today at the Chapel Hill Multipurpose Center.

Barbequed chicken and pork will be served. Ticket prices range from $2 for a barbequed chicken to 75 cents for a small plate of barbeque.

Christmas cards, candles, banners and three dimensional art samples will be available to order for Christmas presents.

"Neighborhood House is an attempt to bring about racial interaction," said Neighborhood House Committee Chairman Wes Hare. "The house is now trying to develop a program which goes beyond the arts and crafts and childrens recreation which we currently have."

Neighborhood house offers classes in sewing and driver education. There are also plans for an African summer program where participants can spend a summer in Africa.

Tickets for the barbeque dinner can be purchased at Neighborhood House, 212 Carr St., or at the Chapel Hill Multipurpose Center, on School Street, just off Church Street. For further information contact Wes Hare at 933-5072 or 929-3316, or Anna Williams at 942-6048.

Readers Theatre slates 'Snippen's Dilemma' today

The UNC Reader's Theatre will present "Snippen's Dilemma," a children's fairy tale, at 4, 9 and 10:30 p.m. today in the Student Union Coffee House.

The 4 p.m. performance will be a special show for children aged 11 and under and their parents.

"Snippen's Dilemma," the final reading of the season, is directed by Anita Galliher and Beverly Barker.

The fairy tale is the story of a Norwegian nisse, or good-luck elf, who is homeless on Christmas Day.

Snippen must choose between bringing Christmas cheer to a destitute family or living in luxury at a friend's house.

Cast members for the production include Daniel Lovine, Diane Dees, Barbara MacKesson, Jim Hackman and Pat Jarrard.
