

Thinking about a summer job?

by David Klinger
Staff Writer

With less than four months left before the summer vacation period, business is picking up at the summer job reading room of the UNC Placement Service, according to summer employment counselor Geri Wilson.

Wilson stresses that the service she directs is open to all UNC students, from freshmen to graduates. "We've tried to particularly reach the freshman class," she said, "because they will then be able to use the service for a total of four years."

In addition, Wilson reminds students that the main emphasis of the summer job program is on assistance and an opportunity to discuss methods by which the individual may locate and apply for summer jobs.

"Placement often connotes definite placement in a specific job. What we offer is assistance. Ultimately, getting a job is up to the student," Wilson said.

Currently, the second portion of the "Colloquy on Summer Jobs" is being conducted by Wilson to acquaint students with the services of the summer job reading room and to remind people who want jobs that they should be looking immediately. Many government offices have already stopped accepting employment applications.

At this point in the spring semester, 260 people have completed registration with Wilson's office, while a total of 625 people made use of summer employment assistance last year.

The annual report of the UNC Placement Service for the academic year 1971-72 reported that 53.4 per cent of last year's total received summer jobs, while 31.7 per cent attributed their employment to assistance from the summer job service.

Located in 203 Gardner Hall are a series of aids designed to assist students in providing leads to employment in their field of interest, including a card file describing current and past summer job openings, domestic and overseas job files containing letters and brochures from many companies, summer camps and governmental agencies; summer job directories; a collection of student survey notebooks describing previous summer jobs held by UNC students; and the College Placement Annual which lists companies that employ students for the summer in programs of job training.

In addition, students who register with Wilson receive notices of job openings as they become available through the campus mail.

1973 promises to be a better year for students in the employment field than last summer. Wilson suggested that job opportunities will be more plentiful, as well as more competitive.

The most important conditions for obtaining worthwhile and interesting summer employment, Wilson said, are geographical flexibility and early inquiries.

As far as the summer job service itself is concerned, Wilson sees the need for expansion. "A lot of students don't know we are here and are unaware of the services we offer," she said. "I don't see the program as a static one."

Canada 'not fully committed'

Secretary of State William P. Rogers met for an hour Thursday in Washington with Canadian External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, who expressed continued reservations about his country's role in policing the Vietnam cease-fire.

Canada's main objection to the method of policing the military standoff is that the supervisory force—also consisting of Indonesia, Poland and Hungary—will have no international diplomatic authority to report to during the first 30 days to its operation.

LBJ buried near birthplace

Lyndon Baines Johnson was buried today in the rain just 100 yards from where he was born 64 years ago.

His family, friends and neighbors from the Hill Country of Texas paid their final respects to the 36th president in the darkness and drizzle at the 100-by-200-foot cemetery near the banks of the Pedernales River.

"It seems ironic on this day that his predecessors began the war in Southeast Asia and his successor ended it," said John B. Connally, Johnson's longtime personal and political friend.

Holshouser warns officials

Gov. Jim Holshouser, declaring that political manipulation of the state's highway system is over, Thursday warned Highway Department officials that "heads will roll" if they don't toe the line.

Holshouser called department heads and field engineers together and told them from now on they take their orders from and answer to Transportation Secretary Bruce Lentz, not their local highway commissioner.

Holshouser made it clear he was downgrading the role of the 23-member Highway Commission, which frequently was involved in controversy during the administration of Gov. Bob Scott.

Sea Island music slated

by Bonnie Weyher
Staff Writer

The South Carolina Sea Islands will have their moment in North Carolina sun when a concert of black traditional music is held Sunday night. The concert will be in Hamilton Hall at 8 p.m.

Singers from St. Helena Island and Jasper County will present a program of blues, spirituals, gospel and freedom songs.

Arrangements for the singers to appear in Chapel Hill were made by Jane Sapp, graduate student in folk music, who helped establish a cultural program for the Penn Community Services on St. Helena Island.

The concert is third in a series sponsored by the Carolina Union Music

Committee and the folklore department. Commenting on the history of the Sea Islands, she said the slaves there were the first to be liberated in South Carolina during the Civil War. Penn School, founded in 1862, was the first independent black establishment.

Sapp noted a great survival of African culture on St. Helena Island. She said, however, that the island is far from isolated. "There is tradition in our culture that flows in every black community."

The Penn Community Singers, who will perform in Chapel Hill, are the outgrowth of a workshop Sapp helped set up as a part of the cultural program.

"There is so much talent on St. Helena," Sapp said. "We wanted the people to have a vehicle to express themselves. The singers help preserve the music and culture of the island."

In addition to conducting workshops on black culture, Sapp also helped establish a museum in which artifacts from missionaries and local artwork, such as painting on oyster shells, are displayed.

Penn School, now known as Penn Community Services, is involved with economic development, black land service, child care and the cultural program.
