Connoisseur samples the Chapel Hill scene

Pizza — The stomach is a lonely hunter

A lot of local pizza eaters are presently disgruntled with Chapel Hill pizza. Many contend that quality pizzas are few and far between in the village. However things could be worse.

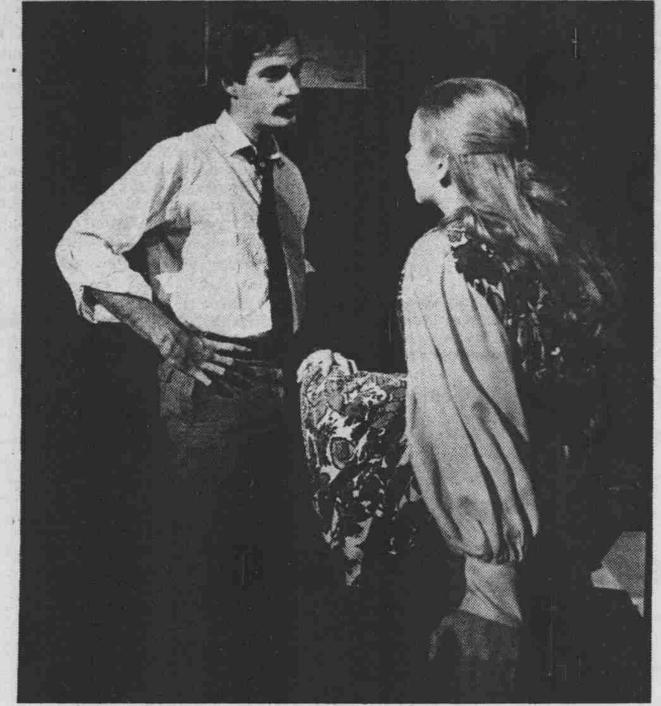

The Dally Tar Heel

After (belch) sampling the pies of (rurrrrrp . . . ah) 14 local restaurants, this poll did find some satisfactory fare.

The local dissatisfaction rests not only in the pizza, but in the consumer himself... Everyone wants something unique in his pie. Pizza eaters generally fall into two, sometimes mutually exclusive camps: crust lovers and topping lovers. The Americanized pizza eater usually concentrates on topping, while his Italian counterpart relishes a thick, yet rather crisp, crust. However, the great majority of us acknowledge the importance of both layers.

Friday, Feb. 14, 1975

Crusts come in various thicknesses and textures. Sicilian pizzas are admired for their very thick crust and disparaged by others for their extreme chewiness. By the same token, disagreement ad infintum rages over how tomatoey a good pizza should be, just as no sure measure exists over how thick the mozzarella should be.

Tastes and preferences have evolved through the ages as has the pizza itself. Pizza orginated somewhere back in the Neolithic Age. Tomatos became available in the 16th century, followed by other ingredients two centuries later. The dish was complete.

The Bourbons served pizza in the Palace of Casenta and Ferdinand IV was known for having them baked in the porcelain factory of Capodinonte. One variety of pizza, pizza Margherita, was served orginally in honor of the first Queen of All Italy. By using red tomatoes, white mozzarella and green basil, this pizza was particularly relished for its approximation of the Italian flag.

Pizza may have early found an audience outside of Italy, according to one unidentifiable and probably unreliable source. Beowulf, in his beer fellowship during celebration of the sea monster Grendel, was said to have partaken of the favorite combination—beer and pizza.

Finally pizza made it to this continent, and was possibly served first on Coney Island. Americans in their native quest for the bigger and better, have added a host of toppings to the fare.

For objectivity's sake, many would contend that a pizza poll should sample pizzas with the same toppings at each restaurant. However, this survey, because of limitations of choice, tried to sample the special items. The restaurants appear in the order they were visited.

Pizza Transit Authority (PTA)—the pizza here is at least the third best in town. The sauce is both tomatoey and spicey, and is probably better than anyone else's. The crust is also excellent, being fairly thick, yet crisp. PTA makes their own dough and sauce. 50-50's are available, as well as double crusts. Disappointment with PTA arises from their free delivery service, which especially during busy weekends may deliver a warm to cool pizza. During my visit, one driver called in flat and no jack. Mark Wooley, manager, said that they had five flats last month. Williams, manager, said that he adds spices when his cheese is crumbled for "an extra kick." However, the mozzerella tends to string when pulled off the pie and may end up around your nose. The crust is very thin and dough is bought somewhere else and refrigerated.

Muzak soothes your hunger pains, and prices are reasonable. Wait-14 minutes.

Peppi's (Franklin St.)—another average pizza, just like the last—hot tasty topping on a cardboard crust. Ron Vickers, manager, said that during the luncheon special you can get as many refills at the salad bar as desired. Privacy is attained through darkness, and the decor is 20th Century Borden Brick. The plants need dusting. Prices are a' little steep. Wait-I can't remember.

Marios—recipient of the Gold Crust Award for being hands down favorite. Eating this pizza is almost a spiritual experience for the pizza aficionado. The tomato sauce is made from squeezed tomatoes and then spiced to the desired flavor. The dough is made there and used the same day, and the pie is baked in a brick in the juice that spreads throughout the pizza. If you like it hot, you may like them.

Decor is a little different, offering light enough to read your menu, and a sign over the kitchen that says "slave quarters." Bathroom is suited for the physically handicapped. Not too long a wait. Great service.

Kwik-ee Take-Out—Winner of the Silver Pepperoni for best pizza on the bus route. Best mozzarella anywhere—very thick and flavorful. The crust takes a back seat only to Marios and is made with high gluten flour for more protein. The sauce is a pizza sauce spiced with oregano, oil, salt, pepper and a little sugar. Pizza is not cooked on a pan. "I don't make pizza like most of these guys around Chapel Hill," owner Tom Mariakakis said. "I used to sell pizza in Times Square and people up there know good pizza."

A fine selection of beer is offered. Kwikee's decor must be seen to be believed. Just as at Marios, apppearances do not matter. Prices are very reasonable. Wait-16 minutes.

Ram's Head Ratheskellar—Everything is brough from a company in Virginia. The pizza is very average, although less greasy than others. Small pizzas are half-moons of the 16-inch standard. Like any Danziger restaurant, the interior is interesting. Prices are reasonable. Short wait—9 minutes.

Pizza Hut— A pizza here will taste like one in a Pizza Hut in Kalamazoo, because of the standarized goodie bag of spices for the sauce. The mozzarella is chewey, the crust a lot like poster board (double and triple crusts are available) and the whole thing way overpriced. However, on the table are real candles. The fireplace is wastefully fueled with natural gas. A plastic plaque announces that "Hospitality Starts Here," but it is located next to the exit. Open every day but Christmas. Wait—who cares.

Pizza eater

Zoom-Zoom—Here is the same pizza as the Ratheskellar's, with the same large selection of toppings. Wilburt Farrar, manager, said that he cooks his pizza a little longer at a lower temperature for more flavor, but surveyor tasted no difference. However, keep in mind what his taste buds have been through. Same prices. Wait?

Leo's—Winner of the Mozzarella Cup for lowest priced pizza in town. A 12" pizza for a $1.50 cannot be matched anywhere, and extras are only 25 cents more as opposed to 50 cents at many other places. Pecans, which manager Nick Cappral says is a popular topping, is 50 cents extra. The pizza is very good, although the crust is nothing to write home about. Dough is made there, and the tomato sauce comes from tomatoes.

Folk songs play in the background, and the room is dominated by a huge blow-up of a shoreline, which Cappral said is somewhere off of California. He has an interesting selection of wines and beers.

Even with his modest prices. Cappral said he makes double on each pizza, which makes you wonder what the other guys are doing. Wait—15 minutes.

Pizzaville—Although you can't say a lot about their pizzas, the generous amounts of salad and ice tea make a visit worthwhile. Pizzaville has regular customers that attest to this fact.

Pizzaville's topping of sausage, mushroom and onion is satisfactory. John oven.

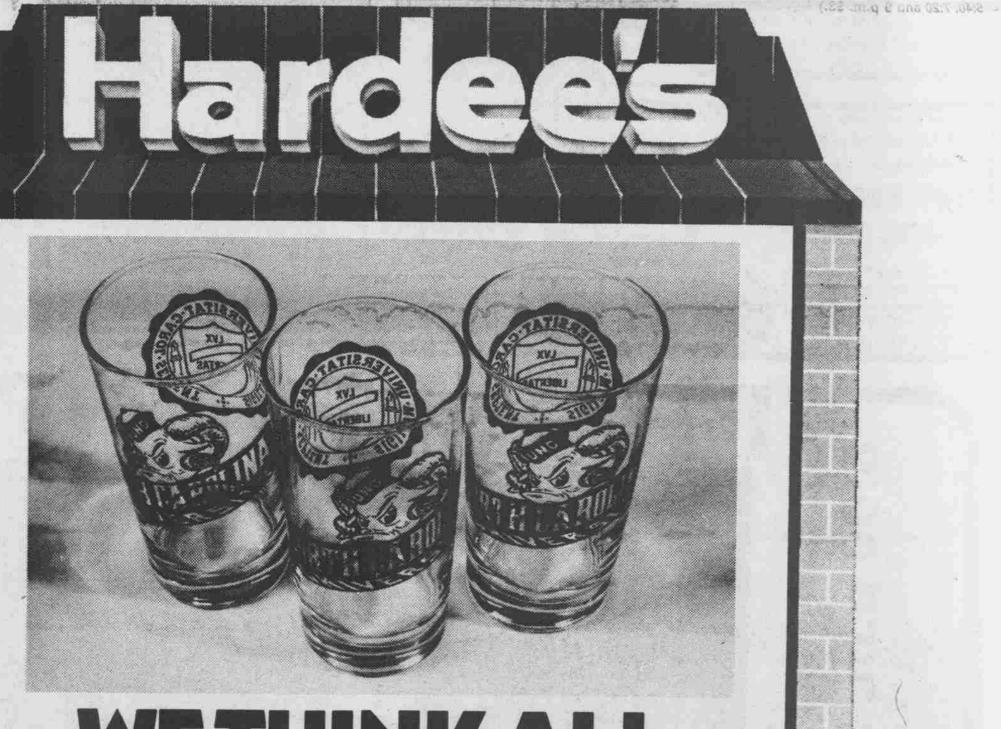

The pizza tested was plain, and it rolled the surveyors socks up and down. Marios tends to be busy, but that does not hurt the service. Prices are a little high, and worth it.

Located on the Chapel Hill-Durham Blvd. in an old, lonely building, Marios is largely a family enterprise, so the care that goes into these pizzas is immediate and outstanding.

Peppi's (15-501 By-pass)—ditto as Franklin St., except that the tomato sauce is more apparent, and surveyor tried, to his dismay, the hot jalopenos. The most devilish thing about these peppers is that their bite it not reserved to the pepper itself, but it is also P.J.'s—The tomato sauce is very good, and the meat balls as a topping are a nice change. Thin crust, slightly flakey, but Al Thomas, part owner, said they might try making it thicker. Dough is made almost every day, and pizza is cooked on a hearth. Mushrooms are not available. The interior has been described as "neo-sputnik" and the sound system is good. Reasonable prices. Wait—15 minutes. features Peppi's ingredients and is cooked in four minutes. Need I say more? Only one size is available (16") and one toppingpepperoni. You can buy it by the slice, too. Prices are slightly steep.

Riverview Pizza Tavern—Everything in the pizza is bought ready-made. The mozzarella is prepared with onion salt and was overdone on the one I tried, since nothing else could be tasted. You can get a 50-50, and the ice tea is bottomless. Prices are reasonable and two-for-the-price-of-one coupons are available in this paper. T.V. on wall. Average wait.
