Craige faces crime problem

Craige Dormitory on South Campus, which houses mostly graduate students, seems to be getting more than its share of campus crime.

Recently, two men disguised themselves as construction workers, gained entrance to the dormitory, and threatened to assault several female residents.

Lynn Pollock, residence director at Craige, along with two other staff members, confronted the two men behind the dorm and advised them to leave. Someone called the campus police, but according to Pollock, they missed the two men but impounded their car. One week later, the two men picked up their car at the Y-Court police station, again eluding the police and positive identification by Pollock.

Pollock said the dorm residents, especially the women, are becoming particularly alarmed at the threat to their privacy. "I don't know what started it, (the trend of increased robberies), but maybe with people being alarmed, they're now beginning to lock their doors," Pollock said.

"We haven't been able to catch anybody, but we've come close." Pollock said while women have been constantly bothered by the threat of robberies and assaults, only a scattered number of robberies have occurred on the men's side of Craige.

Sandra Ward, assistant director of residence life, said students should lock their doors whenever they leave their rooms.

Drive for group blood plan set

by Mary Hendrick
Staff Writer

A membership drive for the new Chapel Hill-Carrboro Community Blood Assurance Plan is set for Thursday through Saturday.

The new plan is the first local program to supply free blood when needed for families, groups and communities. Participation is open to anyone who lives or works in Chapel Hill or Carrboro, including UNC students. To get this free blood coverage, members are required to donate one unit (about a pint) of blood each year.

Public operation of the plan will begin when 1,000 members have signed up.

There will be a sign-up booth in the Union, as well as at three locations in town where students can join the plan. Volunteer nurses, nursing students and medical technology students will be giving out information and applications.

Prospective members will be asked to fill out applications, but not to give blood, during the three-day drive.

The secretary of the blood banks will call them later and schedule a time to give blood sometime during the school year. Students will be called during the school year.

A waiting period of 30 days after the date of signed application is required before a member is eligible for benefits, except in emergency cases.

Students may sign up for a family plan or a group plan. The family plan entitles the member and family to all whole blood needed for transfusion therapy during the year of current membership, free of charge. The group plan sets up a blood account for group members or other designated recipients to draw on. It requires 10 people, or 30 per cent of the group, to give blood each year.

To join either plan, applicants must be in good general health, must be between 18 and 66 years of age, and must weigh at least 110 pounds.

Anyone ineligible for the plan can still join by providing a qualified sub-donor. Whenever anyone covered by the plan needs blood he can obtain it at almost any hospital in the country, through a national clearing-house.

The federal government has been pressuring hospitals across the United States to eliminate the paid-donor system, which North Carolina Memorial Hospital has used, by the end of 1976. Hospital officials say they get higher-quality blood through an all volunteer system.

Kendzior tells Aldermen cleanup to cost $4,120

The Eubanks Road sludge affair will cost the town $4,120, Town Manager Chet Kendzior told the Board of Aldermen Monday night.

Kendzior claimed full responsibility for the sludge-filled trench which violates a Chapel Hill landfill agreement with Carrboro and Orange County. Public Works Director Joseph Rose, however, said last week after the Board learned about the trench that he alone authorized its construction.

Total costs of digging the trench and filling it with the sewage, including costs of a crane, fencing and pumps, was approximately $2,000.

The trench is now two-thirds emptied, and removal of the sludge, if weather permits, will be completed by Thursday, Kendzior said. Only "heavy sludge" remains in the 10-foot trench, which Kendzior predicted may block the town's pumps.

"I can't say specifically whose decision it was (to dig the trench), but according to the town charter the town manager is responsible for all departments, so I am therefore responsible," Kendzior told the board.

Final Interviews for 1975-1976 Union Activities Board
Final interviews for positions on the 1975-76 Union Activities Board will be held February 24-27. Information and sign-ups are available at the Union Desk for positions of Chairperson for the Social, Recreation, Special Projects and Current Affairs Committees. Any regularly enrolled, fulltime UNC student is eligible to apply.

The Recreation Committee is responsible for planning and carrying out lessons, tournaments and exhibitions in the areas of bridge, chess, billiards and bowling. In addition, the committee is also responsible for the annual Quiz Bowl.
Under the leadership of president-elect Lynn Mercer, the Special Projects Committee program will be restructured this year to incorporate a free university program which will offer a series of classes that aren't available to Carolina students in the formal curriculum. Topics for these classes will be determined by students' interests as well as the creativity of the appointed chairperson. Also included under this committee's jurisdiction will be the development of a travel program which can range from one day outings to area concerts to more extensive trips planned for holiday breaks. The committee will also be charged to supervise other programs which do not naturally fall within the realm of other standing committees.

The Current Affairs Committee will be responsible for developing programs to cover topics of current interest on a local, statewide, national and international level. Their presentations may take the format of panel discussions, debates or speakers with expertise on particular problem areas. This year's program has dealt with the economy, fall elections in Chapel Hill and Orange County, housing and academic reform at UNC. The scope of this committee's program is dependent on daily issues in the news.
The position of Chairperson of the Social Committee will be reinstated on the Union Board again this year. The major responsibility will be to develop an ongoing evening program in the Union Snack Bar. Included in the program will be coffeehouses, square dances, combo parties and informal, non-structured activities that will appeal to UNC students.
