

Guidance Center helps students

by Gayle Rancer
Staff Writer

Students stumped on what career to pursue or what to major in can find help at UNC's Guidance and Testing Center.

Students are made aware of their skills and abilities through counseling, testing and an up-to-date and useful source library at the Guidance and Testing Center.

Counselors at the Center administer tests to alert students to their real interests to help them make career choices.

One such test compares the students' test scores to scores of those already working in a specific field. Other tests evaluate personality and scholastic aptitude.

Aside from counseling and testing, the Center houses an Educational and Occupational Information Library where students can find out about employment outlook, salaries and job requirements.

Other library information ranges from preparatory materials for standardized admission exams to preparatory materials for the various schools and departments of the University to specific occupational and geographical resources.

The Center's library also has a wide variety of sources for writing papers in psychology, sociology, business, education and economics. Information on women, minorities, occupational stereotypes and sex-role development may be obtained there.

The Guidance Center can also advise students of available scholarships and of specific schools at which a student may want to continue his education or receive vocational or technical training.

At the present time, the Center has applications and information about the following tests: Admission Test for Graduate Study in Business, Graduate Record Examination, Law School Admission Test, Graduate School Foreign Language Tests, National Teacher Exam, Medical College Admission Test, and Miller Analogy Test.

The Center is located in Nash Hall and is open Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. Its services are free to all UNC students.

Job market tight

Joe M. Galloway, placement director at the Office of Career Planning and Placement, has reported that 1975 UNC alumni face one of the tightest job markets in over a decade.

"Graduates have probably had the most difficult time in finding jobs this year than in the past ten or fifteen years," Galloway told the Tar Heel Wednesday.

More students registered with the placement office this past year than ever before. The official statistics on registration and placement will not be released until a report has been made to Chancellor Ferebee Taylor, Galloway said.

The placement office continues to help students look for jobs after graduation, maintaining contact with graduates through the summer and into the fall if necessary, Galloway added.

Enrollment at 6,300

Summer school enrollment is approximately 6,300 for the first session, summer session director Donald Tarbet said.

This estimate is up from 6,217 for the first session last summer but not near the record 7,129 students enrolled in the first session of 1971.

Tarbet indicated that the trend in recent years is for first session enrollment to be somewhat less than second session enrollment. He pointed to the second session enrollment of 5,214 last summer in comparison to the total summer enrollment of 11,431.

University housing is operating four dorms on North Campus for the summer sessions. Alexander and Conner are open to men. Jolyner is open for women, and Cobb is providing coed housing. Granville Towers is also open for the summer.

Two other university dorms are also being used but not to house summer session students. Craig is open for graduate students, and Parker is being used to house guests and students involved in summer research projects.

The Tar Heel

The Tar Heel will be printed once a week, on Thursday mornings, during the summer. Copies of the paper will be delivered to the following places: The Carolina Union, Y-Court, Scuttlebutt, Carolina Coffee Shop, Circus Room, N.C. Memorial Hospital, Law School, and Craige Dorm.

Students interested in working for The Tar Heel should come by the paper's office in the Carolina Union between 2-5 p.m. Monday afternoon, or call 933-1011.

The Tar Heel will be hiring news writers and copy editors.

Interested persons should contact Cole C. Campbell.

New Carolinian

New Carolinian, the Tar Heel's monthly magazine supplement, which will resume publication at the beginning of fall semester, needs additional staff writers and researchers this summer. Several complex investigative projects are being attempted — this is a good chance for students to publish seriously researched articles.

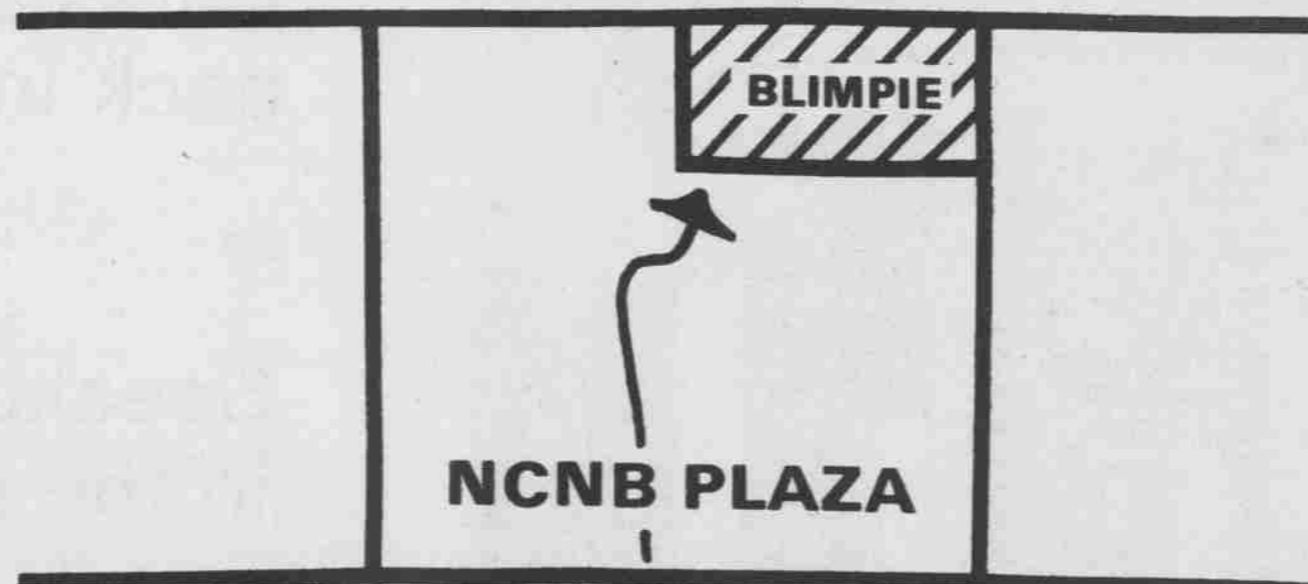

Positions are also available for next fall for music, drama and book critics.

Anyone interested should come to a meeting at 7 p.m. Monday in the Frank Porter Graham Lounge of the Union, or leave a message on the bulletin board in the TH office.
