

Booters nip Terps 2-0, late surge keys Heels

The Carolina soccer team broke a strong Maryland defense with two goals late in the game, surging to a 2-0 victory on Fetzer Field Monday. The win evened the Heels' conference record at 2-2 and raised it overall to 6-4.

The game was characterized by poor offensive execution. The Heels were hobbled by injuries to forwards Tim Fenton and Geoff Griffin, mounting few serious scoring threats. But good defense by fullbacks John Rhodes and Olaf Kampschmidt and goalie Martin Trimble, who made 15 saves, held the game to a scoreless tie for nearly 80 minutes of the 90 minutes.

With 11:11 remaining, Eric Cook headed a Zoltan Berkly corner kick into the right corner of the net from 10 yards out. It was the junior halfback's sixth goal of the year.

Cook's goal keyed his teammates, as they dominated the tired Terps the rest of the way. Steve Skolsky scored an "insurance" goal with 1:27 left, breaking to the middle past two defenders and slamming the ball to the goalie's left.

The loss of Fenton and Griffin from the starting lineup forced UNC Head Coach Marvin Allen to play some less experienced players. Dave Harmon, Rob Shaffer, Peter Dorrance and Kenyon Cook saw considerable action. Allen said he thought the changes may have handicapped the team at first but worked more smoothly as the game progressed.

The Heels' effort eliminated Maryland from contention for ACC runner-up. That position will be decided Friday when Duke challenges the Heels on Fetzer Field.

The Blue Devils defeated Maryland Saturday in Durham by an identical 2-0 score. Duke is currently a half-game ahead of Carolina in the ACC standings with a 2-1-1 record. The game, which will start at 3 p.m., is the season finale for both teams.

ACC tix sign-up

by Ford Worthy
Staff Writer

For the next three days, beginning today, UNC students may sign up for the right to purchase tickets to the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) basketball tournament.

Since demand for the tourney tickets has traditionally far exceeded supply, a special lottery will be used for the second straight year to allocate tickets to individual students. Lloyd Scher, chairman of the ACC ticket committee, which is administering the sign-up, last week announced the registration locations.

Today, all students, graduate and undergraduate may sign up in the South Gallery of the Student Union from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. Wednesday, all graduate students may sign up in the Medical Cafeteria from 12-5 p.m. No undergraduates may sign up on Wednesday. On Thursday, all Law and Institute of Government graduate students will be allowed to register in the Law Building from 2-5 p.m.

Those undergraduates who are unable to register on Tuesday may also sign up on Thursday at the Law Building between 2-5 p.m. Scher emphasized, however, that undergraduate students should make every effort to sign up today, rather than waiting until Thursday.

Students are required to have their athletic passes and student ID cards with them to sign up. Each student will also be required to pledge that he will be the only one to use his ticket. No tickets acquired through the lottery may be transferred in any way to another person, according to Scher.

Each student will be given a number when he signs up. Winning numbers will be randomly selected and will be announced at halftime of the UNC-N.C. State basketball game on Jan. 18. At present, 100 tickets are reserved for students. Scher said there is a possibility more tickets might be made available to students.

Each winning student will be notified and then will have several days to decide whether he will purchase the ticket, which costs $30. The tournament will be played in College Park, Md. in mid-March.

Scher noted two important changes over last year's sign-up procedure. Friends will be allowed to sign up together and non-student spouses of students will not be allowed to register.

"We will be allowing friends to sign up together this year," said Scher. "In other words, if 10 friends come down to the registration desk together, they will be allowed to sign up on the same page. That means if their page is selected then, of course, those 10 people could all buy tickets together."

Also, said Scher, "only UNC students will be allowed to sign up. That means that a non-student who is married to a student is not eligible to sign up, as was the case last year." However, in the case of two students who are married, one may sign up for both, as long as he or she brings the spouse's athletic card and ID.

Scher also asks that students try to sign up during class periods instead of waiting until class changes. He predicts that around 1500 students will register, about 500 more than last year. Last year students were able to sign up on one day only.

Carolina's women's volleyball team completes its regular season with a tri-match against Louisville College and Guilford College here today. The tri-match begins at 6 p.m. in the Women's Gymnasium.

UNC has compiled a 17-8 record so far this season and now prepares for the state tournament which will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday in Charlotte.

Trott reflects on the good times... and bad

by Chip Ensslin
Staff Writer

"You caught me at a strange time..." Bobby Trott said Sunday. "I'm sorry, it's just, well, when you lose four games in a row..." His voice trailed off. He was quiet, subdued.

UNC safety Bobby Trott

distracted. His sad face was a grim contrast to a football figurine grinning and wearing number 11 on his dresser. "I just can't believe it's happening," he said. "We all can't believe it's happening." He shook his head. The Carolina football team has a 2-6 season record.

The senior defensive back from Kannapolis, N.C. has seen good times and bad at Carolina. Trott was an all-Piedmont Conference defensive back at A.L. Brown High School, the alma mater of recent University of Tennessee star Haskell Stanback. College scouts looked at Trott's films but called the 5-9 Trott too small to play college football.

So he wrote a letter to the coaching staff here and told them he was going to try out. UNC had a history of small, quick defensive backs, and he hoped he could capitalize on it. He even inherited number 11 from Lou Angelo, another small back.

Trott made the freshman team his first year and practiced with the 11-1 Sun Bowl-bound varsity team until Christmas. This experience and a good spring helped him. He moved into the starting lineup for the last two games of the season after injuries sidelined Phil Lamm and Frank Townsend at the end of his sophomore year.

Last year Trott led the team in tackles from his weak safety position. Now he is a senior on the team that is desperately trying to stop a skidding season from nosediving.

Only when pressed would Trott recall the memorable events of his career here. He told of the East Carolina game his sophomore year. It was the first game he started and made 19 tackles, as the Tar Heels won by one point. He noted also that year playing in the Sugar Bowl stadium and seeing the Superdome under construction; and last year playing in the steamy artificial turf in the Sun Bowl in El Paso. The sun was warming a frozen field.

He spoke of beating nationally ranked Pittsburgh and N.C. State last year. He recalled the rigors of making the team as a walk-on.

"I had six water breaks when I was a freshman. They didn't know what to do with me, so they kept telling me to take water breaks." He smiled as he mentioned the instance.

"It was pretty rough, yeah, I guess, but it wasn't that bad. Most of the coaches were pretty fair. But I came here to go to school, and I would have done that whether I played or not.

Trott, an above-average student, has been on a Cannon Mills scholarship which has paid for most of his education, along with the athletic scholarship he earned. He is a business major.

After he graduates, Bobby Trott will either go on to a job or to graduate school. He doesn't know which. But he will go with a trunkful of old programs, a Sun Bowl watch, and memories of Carolina.
