briefs Egypt will buy nuclear reactors

From the wires of United Press International

WASHINGTON — The United States and Egypt signed a joint statement Wednesday spelling out unprecedented conditions under which Egypt is prepared to buy two nuclear reactors from the United States.

The two principle safeguards would:

- Require Egypt to turn over plutonium produced by the reactors for reprocessing, fabrication and storage outside Egypt.
- Prohibit Egypt from using for military purposes any of the fuel, equipment or technology supplied by the United States.

The conditions were contained in a Joint Statement on Proposed Cooperation in Fields Pertaining to the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, signed at the State Department by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismael Fahmi.

The statement is the forerunner of a full-fledged agreement under which Egypt would buy, at an estimated cost of $1.2 billion, two U.S. reactors with a total electrical capacity of 1,200 megawatts.

Colby stays on

WASHINGTON — President Ford Wednesday persuaded ousted CIA Director William Colby to stay on the job temporarily and the White House, battling its critics, denied Ford is covering up the motives for his cabinet shakeup.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said the public would appreciate Ford's actions "after this thing settles down" and he rebuked Sen. Frank Church, the Senate Intelligence Committee chairman, for opposing the choice of Ambassador George Bush to succeed Colby.

Nessen said Ford called Colby to the White House and asked him to remain CIA director with "full authority" until the Senate confirms Bush.

That would leave Colby in charge for another month or more since no date for confirmation hearings has been set.

Student accused of stealing acquitted in open court trial

by Dwight Ferguson Staff Writer

An Undergraduate Court trial was opened to the public Tuesday night at the request of the defendant, Cynthia Crawford, marking one of the few times in recent years that a student trial has been open.

Crawford, a senior zoology major, was accused by senior Perry Hodge of taking his jacket during the last summer session. She was acquitted by the court.

When asked why she requested to have a public trial, Crawford said she "just wanted to."

Trial observers found it a rare opportunity to see how student judicial system trails are conducted. The basic operating procedures for the student judicial system are described in the Instrument of Student Judicial Governance.

Undergraduate Court Chairperson Rick Mazo presided over Crawford's trial and also served as one of the seven Undergraduate Court members.

Mazo called the trial an unusual proceeding because of Crawford's request that it be public. Allowing the public to attend created no problems for the court, he said.

According to the judicial governance document, any defendant may have a public trial if the court agrees.

Associate Dean for Student Affairs James Cansler said most student trials are closed because they are legally "administrative actions as opposed to court procedures as such."

For this and other reasons, the "fully rigorous procedures of a regular trial" are not used by the student courts, he said.

Cansler also noted that prior to the adoption of the judicial governance document in October 1974, the only members allowed to attend a public hearing were two Daily Tar Heel reporters.
