

Gov. James Hunt

Hunt reversal applauded

A sampling of local opinion shows area merchants generally approve Gov. Jim Hunt's decision Friday to drop his request for voluntary cutbacks on business operating hours.

Hunt's request last week that merchants limit their operating hours to 54 a week had drawn much criticism from the N.C. Merchants Association.

In the order dropping his request for limits on operating hours, Hunt said he would strictly enforce a mandatory 48-hour-a-week heating limit on retail businesses. The mandatory order requires that businesses heat their buildings for no more than 48 hours a week at a temperature no greater than 62 degrees.

Reaction among local retail food-store managers reflects varying degrees of satisfaction with Hunt's energy policies.

Albert Markham, manager of Winn Dixie, said he thought Hunt's original operating-limit request was a reasonable one. He said he was willing to go along with the governor's wishes, but his business had been hurt because local independently owned stores and convenience shops were not abiding by the request.

Markham, who had changed his operating hours in compliance with the 48-hour request, returned to normal operating hours Friday after the request was withdrawn.

Fowler's Food Store owner Roger Cook said he wishes the governor's original request limiting operating hours had been mandatory. Cook noted his store was the last store to abandon 48-hour-a-week operations.

"What ticks me off is that the large chain stores say the independent stores aren't going along with the limit, so they can't," Cook said. He said Fowler's lost a substantial amount of business by complying with Hunt's request.

Hugh Westray, owner of Hugh's Food and Party Store, said his store cut back on operating hours last week, but his store did remain open more than 48 hours last week. Westray said he did not think that he could help the energy situation any by limiting operating hours to 48 because he had his heating system cut off anyway.

Westray said Hugh's had several freezers that operate continuously and produce large amounts of heat. He said that recently these freezers have served as the store's only source of heat.

According to manager Larry Trolinger, Ken's Quickie Mart hasn't operated its heating system for two weeks. Concerning Hunt's withdrawal request, Trolinger said, "If a person wants to continue operating in the cold, I think he should be allowed to do it."

Trolinger said the temperature in his store has gotten as low as 50 degrees, but his business has been unaffected by the chill.

All local merchants interviewed strongly supported Hunt's mandatory heating limitation. In fact, each of them said that his business would go beyond the governor's requirements in efforts to conserve energy.

Interviews start next week for Contact 77 counselors

By JACK GREENSPAN

Staff Writer

Interviews begin next week for students aspiring to be orientation counselors—the folks who wear the Carolina-blue T-shirts and red armbands during the first weeks of the fall semester and acquaint new students with the campus.

Mary Friday, chairperson of the Orientation Commission, said that a team of commission members and area coordinators plan to interview all counselor applicants.

The commission distributed more than 1,000 applications Feb. 14 to the Union Desk and to housing residence directors (RDs) and residence advisors. Completed applications, due Feb. 28 for freshman counselors and March 15 for junior transfer counselors, may be returned to the Union Desk or to the RDs.

Friday suggested that prospective counselors submit applications as soon as possible so that interviews can be arranged.

Interviews will continue through the week after spring break.

"We want to select the best people," Friday said. "We want people with an interest in orientation and helping new students—people with a willingness to devote some time to planning area activities as well."

Friday said that the Orientation Commission will take a new approach in planning orientation groups. "We're moving away from the 5-1 ratio of freshman counselors."

She explained that student-counselor ratios will differ from area to area on campus. Group sizes will hinge on the number of counselors accepted in the area. "We're not going to set a limit, but I'm sure that we won't have more than eight to 10 (new students) in a group."

Although all prospective counselors will be interviewed, Friday said that answers to questions on the application will weigh in the selection. "We've changed the application," she said. "There are more subjective questions. They should be filled out thoughtfully."

Friday said that Contact '77 will resemble previous orientation programs, but there will be a new emphasis on involving faculty and parents.
