college or simply say "any men's hall" if he wants to," she said.

She also noted that a student who is readmitted to his dorm usually retains priority over the room in which he is currently living.

If both roommates are readmitted to their dorm and want the same room but don't want to room together, the roommate who has submitted his application with another student, must move out of his former room. The single student cannot be forced out of the room because of the priority rule.

Gibbs said students desiring designated single rooms should make a note somewhere on their contract because a large number of single rooms are available each year.

She also said that this year for the first time, Granville Towers residents who wish to move into University housing will be allowed to enter their names (along with students closed out in the general drawing) into the lottery for spaces on the central waiting list.

Center Bookstore. They must be returned to 201 Steele Building by Feb. 24.

"Students and professors are encouraged to nominate teachers and professors who have demonstrated what they believe to be excellence in undergraduate teaching," said Hal Levinson, a member of the Chancellor's student-faculty committee on Distinguished Teaching Awards.

This committee will present the nominations to Chancellor N. Ferebee Taylor, who will make the final decisions.

Persons making nominations are encouraged to indicate their reasons for believing a particular faculty member should receive one of these awards. "This is one of the few chances faculty members have to be rewarded for teaching as opposed to the usual emphasis on research," Levinson said. "And it's a good chance for students to support what they believe the conception of a good faculty member to be."

Former recipients of the Distinguished Teaching Award include Doris Betts, Robert Bain, E. W. Brooks, Jeffrey Obler, Gerald Unks and Sam Williamson. Professors who have won awards within the past five years are ineligible this year.
