Winston seminar provides apartment-dwellers advice

By GEORGE JETER
Staff Writer

Students closed out of their dorms and other persons planning to live in apartments next fall received free advice on leases, landlords and other apartment-related topics at a seminar in Winston dormitory last week.

Student and legal speakers at the meeting warned students to beware of numerous apartment pitfalls, ranging from deceptive contracts to roommate problems.

"The first thing you do is get a lease in writing, and make sure you agree with and understand everything in it," Dorothy Bernholtz, attorney for the Student Legal Services, said. "It's very dangerous to use an oral lease, and they are binding."

Bernholtz further warned students to beware of last-minute promises to fix up apartments before they sign a lease. "Any agreements made prior to signing the lease that are not in the lease are not binding. When you are ready to sign the lease, check the condition, and put it in writing."

Students were also encouraged to come to the Student Legal Services with any questions or problems about leases. "The biggest problem students have is with landlords trying to keep security deposits," Bernholtz said.

Several experienced apartment dwellers also discussed lease problems and other considerations.

"Try to get an upstairs apartment," Jo Wyriole advised. "You won't have as many problems with the plumbing."

"You also need to think about distance, shopping and classes," Laurie Dawson said. Another tenant told students to find out about less obvious defects in each apartment, such as insulation.

On a more personal level Doug Spain, from the University Counseling Center, advised tenants to discuss with their roommates what each wants and expects from living in an apartment.

Spain also advised roommates to establish clear rules about such things as chores, bills and noise. "We recommend that you actually set up a contract with your roommate before you sign a workable base," he said.

He encouraged roommates to vent any minor grievances before major problems developed. "Don't let things get out of hand," Spain said.

Professor receives undergrad research grant

By MELINDA STOVALL
Staff Writer

Edward Azar, UNC political science professor, has received a grant of $21,580 from the National Science Foundation to direct summer undergraduate research in international relations.

Azar said students involved in the summer program will receive the basics of conducting research in international relations. Students will choose and develop their own research projects based on work being done in the Studies in Conflict and Peace program.

The CSF grant is the most recent of the many grants Azar has received for projects like the SCP program, which he established in 1972. Azar created the program to house and coordinate international relations research data.

SCP is strictly a research program, designed to provide data and analysis for use in other courses. A current program project is the Conflict and Peace Data Bank, a computer containing 250,000 entries of interactions between countries.

Other SPC projects include the Conflict Dynamics Project, which focuses on the activities of oil-producing and oil-consuming nations and the International Crisis Early Warning project, which develops methods to avert international crises through advance detection.

Azar said the summer research program is a continuation of a program offered last summer. He said he had to reapply for the grant for the coming summer program.

Those considering participation in the program, Azar said, should have some interest in learning about and working in international relations. He added that the program is pertinent for students associated with the social sciences or students desiring to enhance their research abilities for future honors theses.

"But a very important aspect of the program is that it enriches undergraduate teaching by combining research with the basic lecture format," Azar said.

Students who develop their own research projects within the program will work with a faculty member and with other students, Azar said, because no project is really individual or independent.

"This is what makes the program most meaningful," Azar said. "It puts a student and a teacher together to think about a problem and then to do something about it."

SCAU rates Food Town least expensive area store

By LAURA ALEXANDER
Staff Writer

Food Town was found to have the lowest prices of 10 Chapel Hill area grocery stores surveyed by the UNC Student Consumer Action Union March 19-22.

The organization compiled price listings of sample items in eight separate food categories from these stores ranked from least to most expensive: Food Town, Winn Dixie, A&P Eastgate, Big Star, Harris Teeter, A&P Airport Road, A&P Carrboro, Byrd's, Kroger and Fowler's.

Food Town ranked first or second (least expensive) in all categories except produce, in which it came in sixth, dairy products, in which it ranked ninth and miscellaneous foods, in which it finished seventh.

Fowler's ranked first in the produce category, the Airport Road A&P store had lowest prices on processed fruits and vegetables. Kroger was first in the dairy foods category and Winn Dixie had lowest prices on miscellaneous foods.

Winn Dixie also had the lowest overall prices on non-dairy drinks. Sample items from this grouping included four brands of beer. Food Town ranked second in this category. Although beer prices did not show a wide spread, brands were generally as much as 25 cents higher at Harris Teeter and as much as 40 cents higher at Fowler's than at the other stores surveyed.

Other items which showed significant price spreads were 3-pound canned hams, which ranged from $4.49 at Big Star to $8.19 at Kroger, and half-gallons of low-fat milk, which cost 53 cents at the A&P on Airport Road and 97 cents at Winn Dixie.

With a few exceptions, all prices quoted in the survey were based on the cheapest brands of particular items in a given store.

Bazaar project needs volunteers

The International Handicrafts Bazaar, the main fund raising event of the Campus Y, will hold a meeting for volunteers at 7:30 tonight in the Y Building.
