

South loses financial aid due to federal formulas

By CAROL HANNER
Staff Writer

Southern states lost $117.8 million in federal funds last year, and may lose more in the coming years, the Southern Growth Policies Board vice chairperson said Friday.

State Sen. Willis Whichard of Durham told a UNC alumni reunion that federal-aid formulas have changed, directing money to Northern cities away from the South.

The new formulas use lack of growth and the amount of old housing instead of poverty as criteria for a city's financial need, Whichard said.

He said the new formula results in windfall for cities which receive increased funding because they have a large number of old houses, even though they may be wealthy communities.

"For example, Oak Park, Ill., received a 400 percent increase (in funds) even though their poverty rate is only 3.3 percent," Whichard said.

"Meanwhile, Atlanta, with a 16 percent poverty level, got only a 12 percent increase in money," he said.

Whichard attributed the emphasis on Northern cities to the South's loss of congressional seniority in recent years.

He cited several myths which have led to a move away from funding the South, such as the idea that the South is draining federal funds and industry from the North.

"Actually, a General Accounting Office report shows the North is the No. 1 recipient of funds compared to other regions," he said. "Also, businesses have expanded and new ones have been created, rather than businesses moving from the North to the South."

Howard Lee, the secretary of the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, said he is disappointed with the trend of favoring the North.

"This deprives small cities in the South of the opportunity to prepare for the growth which is inevitable," Lee said.

"I'm not saying cut off funds to New York City. I just think we should fairly distribute funds so we can solve some of the (small city's) problems while they are still solvable."

The Southern Growth Policies Board is a research and information group headed by Gov. Jim Hunt. The original chairperson in 1974 was then Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia.

Whichard said the multistate group is not equipped to lobby for changing the federal-aid formulas, but he said it will do research and gather data to provide information for legislators and lobbyist groups.

Actor to play Judas, Peter

Biblical scenes and characters will come to life today and Tuesday in two performances by Ronald Overholser, a dramatist who specializes in New Testament portrayals.

Overholser will play a different character each night for 30 minutes beginning at 7 p.m. in 111 Murphy. Organizers of the performance said Overholser probably will play Judas Iscariot today and Peter on Tuesday. All scripts for the performances were written by Overholser, based on dialogue taken from the Bible.

The performances are sponsored by the Campus Christian Fellowship.

News in Brief

Preyer: King conspiracy possible

WASHINGTON (AP)—A key member of the House Assassinations Committee said Sunday there is evidence which, if it checks out, would show there was a conspiracy to kill Martin Luther King Jr.

U.S. Rep. Richardson Preyer of Greensboro, who is chairperson of the subcommittee on the John Kennedy assassination, made the statement in an interview on the CBS television program Face the Nation.

Preyer, citing the deaths of witnesses over the years since the 1968 killing, replied: "It's going to be difficult to prove. It may be that we can only prove an association rather than a convictable conspiracy."

Angels outfielder Bostock gunned down

GARY, Ind. (AP)—California Angels outfielder Lyman Bostock, one of major league baseball's highest-paid players, died Sunday of a shotgun blast fired into a car in which he was riding with the wife of the man arrested for the shooting, police said.

One of the other passengers was identified by police as Barbara Smith, 26, whose husband, Leonard, 31, was arrested in the shooting.

Police said Smith, who was identified by his wife, was arrested at his home Sunday about six blocks from where the shooting occurred. Charges were not immediately filed, police said.

Broughton report critical of Hunt

RALEIGH (AP)—The N.C. Department of Human Resources has released a report that criticizes Gov. Jim Hunt's practice of overseeing appointments to key positions at Broughton Hospital in Morganton.

The report said political interference "has led the staff to feel harassed, at times demoralized, and even intimidated to the point of feeling that to speak out is to be destroyed."

Some jobs that used to be filled by the hospital administration must now be cleared by the governor.

A spokesperson for the governor's office said it is the responsibility of Hunt and the Department of Human Resources to see that the hospital is run properly "and that included seeing who is hired."

Cosmonauts set new orbit record

MOSCOW (AP)—Two Soviet cosmonauts, sipping an herbal cure-all and rarely using their first-aid kit, on Sunday became the first men to orbit the Earth for more than 100 days.

A Soviet doctor monitoring their condition reported that after passing the crucial six-week hurdle in mid-summer the health of Vladimir Kovalenok and Alexander Ivanchenkov reached a stable level and "we are fully satisfied with their state of health."

He said the two men, aboard the Salyut 6 space station, very seldom use the first-aid kit and prefer to drink eleutherococcus, an herbal tonic that he said "combines good food and medicinal qualities."

The cosmonauts were launched June 15 and broke the world space endurance record of 96 days last Wednesday.

The cabinet, meeting once a month unless otherwise necessary, will be structured on the principle of the round table ideology as closely as possible. No single group will carry more influence than another in a cabinet decision. Johnson said.

Arlee Griffin, elected presiding officer pro tem of the cabinet, emphasized that each member-organization and its representatives must offer a sincere commitment to the cabinet before it can be effective.

Middle East leaders won't back accords

The Associated Press

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance completed his five-day Middle East tour Sunday by meeting with Syrian President Hafez Assad and flew home without gaining the Arab support he sought for the Camp David peace accords.

In a brief airport statement before departing, Vance said he agreed with Assad that dialogue between Syria and the United States should continue in the hope of achieving peace.

Speaking privately, U.S. officials said Vance had hoped only to persuade Assad to soften his opposition to the Camp David agreements so other Arab governments might find it easier to accept them. But senior Syrian sources said Assad told Vance it was impossible for Syria to change its position.

The meeting originally had been set for Saturday. It was put off because a meeting of Assad and other hard-line Arab leaders opposed to the current U.S. peace initiative lasted longer than expected. Assad asked for the postponement, and U.S. sources said Vance considered canceling the trip but decided to come here rather than risk offending the leaders of Saudi Arabia, who helped arrange the session with the Syrian leader.

In Jerusalem, meanwhile, the Israeli Cabinet approved the Camp David accords, which are to be submitted to parliament for ratification this week.

In Kuwait, the daily Al-Qabas newspaper reported that Assad and Yasser Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, plan to go to Saudi Arabia to brief Saudi leaders on last week's anti-Camp David summit in Damascus. Arafat and Libyan leader Moammar Khadafi had flown from Damascus to Jordan Friday to enlist King Hussein's support, but he turned them down.

In a speech ending the meeting of Arab hard-liners Saturday, Assad called Camp David "the summit of surrender" and urged all Arab nations "not to adopt this treasonous line."

Vance was greeted in Damascus by Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam. Leaders of the hard-line Arab states were leaving, Damascus, when Vance arrived, and his plane was shunted off to a remote section of the airport to avoid the ceremonial departures of the Arab officials. Security was tight, and Syrian soldiers lined both sides of the 12-mile route from the airport to the capital.

Syria leads the Arab opponents to the peace initiative that began last November when Egyptian President Anwar Sadat flew to Jerusalem for talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Neither Jordan nor Saudi Arabia, the other countries Vance visited on the tour, moved any closer to acceptance of the accords, although neither rejected them outright.
