

Thevis suspected of stealing checks

From staff and wire reports

Chapel Hill police are awaiting FBI pictures of pornography kingpin Michael G. Thevis and Jeanette Evans in hopes local witnesses can link the pair to a recent illegal check-cashing scheme in Chapel Hill.

Thevis, whose pornography empire includes several North Carolina adult book stores, and Evans were arrested last week in Bloomfield, Conn. Thevis had been a fugitive for the past seven months and was on the FBI's 10 most-wanted list.

At the time of their arrest, Thevis was attempting to withdraw money from a bank under an assumed name, and Evans was waiting in front of the bank in a car containing $550,000 and several handguns.

A.H. Sumney, a Chapel Hill police detective said police will compare the FBI photographs with films taken at the University Mall branch of North Carolina National Bank where the illegal check-cashing occurred. Bank personnel also will try to identify the pair.

Police in Burlington, Greensboro and Raleigh also are investigating similar check-forging schemes in which stolen checks were forged and then deposited in bank accounts.

The practice, known as check kiting, involves withdrawing the money a day or two later, before bank officials have time to discover the forged checks.

Chapel Hill Police Capt. Lindy Pendergrass said earlier four businesses in Chapel Hill reported stolen checks that later turned up in the forgery scheme. One was used to buy airplane tickets at the Greensboro airport. He declined to name the firms.

Pendergrass said checks were stolen by someone who entered the stores during business hours, waited until the clerks were not looking and removed the checks.

When Thevis was picked up in Connecticut, he was using identification cards stating he was Arbie Jonathan Evans of Mebane, officials said.

Arbie Evans is the name of Jeanette Evans' brother.

Thevis has been indicted on 14 counts including arson, extortion in the building of his $100 million pornography empire and in the slayings of two former subordinates turned rivals.

When he escaped, Thevis was serving an eight and a half year sentence for arson conspiracy and interstate transportation of obscene materials.

Since his recapture, probes into his activities have proliferated.

In latest testimony, FBI agent Paul King testified Thevis made entries in a pocket calendar that indicated he planned to buy a gun similar to the weapon used to kill a key federal witness.

The calendar was recovered from a car belonging to Thevis after his arrest.

An Atlanta newspaper earlier reported Thevis may have spent much of his six and a half months of freedom in Summerville, S.C. According to the paper, Thevis apparently stayed at a rented Summerville apartment which the town's assistant police chief helped procure in early May. Thevis reportedly told the police chief he was a businessman planning to locate in the city.

"Untenured faculty almost must neglect their students in order to survive. By the time tenure is achieved, the habit often is engrained or it just becomes convenient to avoid the troublesome undergraduate."

Williamson said this is not the case. "In our merit pay system, excellent teachers receive monetary awards as well as do excellent researchers. Pay merits for the oxen are not neglected any more than those for the sprinter."

SEVERAL OTHER participants in the forum suggested ways to improve undergraduate education at UNC. Williamson suggested some type of practice should be implemented to integrate the experience of seniors before they graduate.

"There ought to be some capstone kind of experience that helps to tie the undergraduate education into some overall pattern," he said. He said senior tutorials and papers, a comprehensive exam or seminars in majors fields are possible ways to accomplish this.

Adams said he advocates a four-year arts and sciences program with a four-course load for students. "This would abolish the General College and elevate undergraduates to the graduate level," he said.

Kudzu Alliance stages 'die-in' near state capitol

RALEIGH (AP)—More than 50 persons staged a mock "die-in" in the Fayetteville Street Mall area Thursday to protest the operation of the Shearon Harris Nuclear Power Plant in Wake County.

The protesters said they were portraying the possible results of a nuclear disaster. Three robed "death" figures pointed their fingers at protesters who played out their idea of death from exposure to radiation.

"We're not simply trying to hit people with the horrors of nuclear power," spokesperson Jim Overton of Chapel Hill said. "We've tried to provide a sense of the alternatives to nuclear power—like solar energy. We're trying to impress on people that we're not locked into a doomsday situation, that there are alternatives."

One of the three death figures, Sunshine Sutherland of Raleigh, said the group has a big fight ahead of it in trying to stop Carolina Power & Light's use of the plant, but she said, "Big corporations, though they sound mighty, are not almighty.

"I think it's been proven in years past that it takes time to educate people and once they know about the alternatives, they usually come through in the end."

A number of curious bystanders heard Kudzu members tell about what they said will be the potential hazards of the Shearon Harris plant—fatal radiation leaks caused by an accident and long-term low-level radiation leaks, which the group said could cause cancer, genetic defects and other problems.

Members also charged that nuclear plants are the most expensive way to produce energy because of high construction costs.

CP&L has denied there will be any danger from the plant, citing the stringent regulations it has had to meet to get federal licensing.

Besides the die-in, the alliance staged a caravan moving along Interstate 85 to protest alleged hazards of transporting radioactive waste along highways.
