Hunt declares Dance Week

By KIMBERLY McGUIRE

In an effort to encourage a struggling dance program in North Carolina, Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. has declared this week "Dance Week" across the state.

Jon Gossett of the N.C. Arts Council in Raleigh said, "National Dance Week was actually in April, but we didn't have enough activities scheduled to really celebrate it, so we asked the governor to declare it here in May."

Gossett is organizer of a Dance Showcase to be performed tonight at N.C. State in Raleigh to highlight this week's festivities.

Dance Week was ushered in last weekend with performances by the New Performing Dance Company in Durham. In Charlotte, the New Reflections Dance Theater will put on productions through Sunday in honor of the proclamation.

"I hope that next year we can plan for a Dance Week in conjunction with the national celebration," Gossett said. "We hope to have activities all week long, including a street festival on the mall in front of the capitol in Raleigh."

Gossett encouraged attendance at the Dance Showcase at 7:30 tonight at Stewart Theater to show support for the arts effort. Tickets will be available at the door.

The six companies joining for the unprecedented event are the N.C. Dance Theater of Winston-Salem, the Frank Holder Dance Company of Greensboro, the New Performing Dance Company and the Ebony Dance Theater of Durham, the Easy Moving Company of Raleigh and the New Reflections Dance Theater of Charlotte.

The Dance Showcase is sponsored by the N.C. Arts Council and the Raleigh Chapter of the Triangle Dance Guild.
