New fighting in Iran takes 50 lives

A fresh outbreak of fighting between Kurdish rebels and government forces has taken at least 50 lives in western Iran, a rebel spokesman said Thursday. The new bloodshed was reported as signals grew stronger that some progress might be possible in resolving the U.S. Embassy standoff and winning freedom for the approximately 50 American hostages in Tehran.

Guatemalan police attack seized embassy

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala (AP)—Police stormed the Spanish Embassy, which had been occupied earlier Thursday by Guatemalan peasants, and the Red Cross said more than 30 persons were killed. The Embassy caught fire during the attack. Spanish Ambassador Maximo Cajal y Lopez, who was wounded in the fight said, "the police action was brutal."

Bernholz said four students have asked her advice on buying the products in the past week. All four canceled their contracts before the three-day trial period was up. These students had paid the non-refundable $20 deposit before the salesman left the party, however.

If asked by one of the salesmen to arrange a demonstration party, dorm residents should turn down the offer, note the caller's name and contact their residence director or the residence life office, Harpster said.

11 rapes, assaults reported in January

By JOHN ROYSTER
Staff Writer

Eleven rapes, assaults and other offenses against women were reported to the Chapel Hill Rape Crisis Center and the Chapel Hill police in January. Janet Colm, director of Rape Crisis, said six calls made to the center in January were assault-related. She said that at least some of the assaults were actual rapes, but she said she could not give any numbers or details of the cases because of the center's policy on confidentiality.

Of the six calls to Rape Crisis, Colm said, five were reports of incidents in January, and the sixth had occurred earlier. Colm said she could not say whether any of Rape Crisis' calls were the same ones reported to Chapel Hill police.

Colm said the crisis center's figures for the last quarter of 1979 (October-December) showed 14 assault-related calls to the center.

Chapel Hill police reported five assaults and other incidents including females in January in the Gimghoul Road area adjacent to UNC. The police, however, reported no rapes.

Jane Cousins, a Chapel Hill Police Department social worker, described the five Gimghoul area incidents:

- On Jan. 7, a woman jogger reported that she was attacked on Glandon Drive. She said she knelt her attacker in the grass and escaped.

- Later that same week, a woman jogger reported that she was pursued on Hayes Road, first by a man in a small red automobile and later by the same man on foot.

She reached a nearby house, and the man who had chased her stopped on the front lawn and said he only wanted to know her name, the woman reported.

- On or about Jan. 16, a man reportedly exposed himself at Greenwood Road and the N.C. 54 business route.

- On Jan. 16, two women called police about 30 minutes apart and reported a man acting suspiciously in the Gimghoul Road-Glandon Drive area. Both said that a man wearing a baseball cap followed them and hid behind walls and bushes.

The callers said that the man left in a large late model automobile. Public Safety Officer Kenny Rogers said he chased the car from the neighborhood and down the N.C. 54 business route east, but was unable to stop the car.

Cousins said all of the incidents except the one involving the small red automobile were thought to involve the same man. She said no arrests have been made.

Besides the 11 incidents in January, a woman was the victim of a strong-arm robbery on Estes Drive on Dec. 28, said Ben Callahan, police department administrative assistant.

The woman reported that she was walking home from work when a young male assaulted her and stole a knapsack containing $25 and some personal effects, Callahan said. There are no suspects in that case.

Lt. Charles Mauer of the University Police said no assaults had been reported to his department since November.

Neither the Orange County Sheriff's Department nor the Carrboro police reported any rapes or assaults on females in January.

CWP plans to attend march despite ban

By CHUCK BURNS
Staff Writer

Despite being kicked out of the Feb. 2 Mobilization Coalition, the Communist Workers Party still plans to attend the march in Greensboro Saturday. Meanwhile, student groups at UNC and other area colleges and universities said they are more willing to attend the rally now that the CWP is no longer part of the coalition.

The march is being held to protest the resurgence of violent racist activities by the Ku Klux Klan and Nazi Party, and to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the first sit-in in Greensboro by A&T students who requested service at a segregated Woolworth's lunch counter on Feb. 1, 1960.

The Executive Body of the Mobilization Coalition booted the CWP from the coalition after the CWP refused to give assurances that its members would not be armed. The CWP is asking the National Steering Committee of the Mobilization Coalition sponsors to overturn the action by the executive body, said Charles Finch, CWP spokesperson. The Committee will meet tonight in Greensboro at 6 p.m. to discuss the issue.

Marion Yuen, CWP press officer, said the CWP still plans to continue its activity, both nationally and locally.

Finch said the executive body violated an agreement made at an Atlanta conference on Dec. 15, 1979. "We agreed that the question of arms would not be discussed," Finch said.

Greensboro City Manager Tom Osborne has said any permit he issues will contain specific provisions banning members from carrying weapons.

But, Yuen said, the CWP has not said it will carry arms. "We are not saying whether or not we will be armed. We are just upholding the right to bear arms."

Yuen said if the CWP agrees not to carry arms they will be at the mercy of the Klan, the Nazis, the police and the National Guard.

Gov. Jim Hunt has ordered the National Guard and 150 highway patrol men to aid police in Greensboro. Greensboro Mayor Jim Melvin requested the assistance. A similar request was granted last November during a funeral march for the five slain demonstrators.

But some students appear relieved that the CWP is no longer part of the coalition, according to Greg Tucker, one of the student organizers behind the march.

"A lot of students seemed to feel like the CWP was a factor in coming to it (the march)," he said. "Some students at Guilford College (in Greensboro) that we talked to said they would come now that the CWP was out (of the coalition)."

About 10-15 UNC medical students plan to attend the march on Saturday.

"We need to make more than just a vocal statement against racist groups like the Klan," said UNC medical student Barbara Johnston. "And secondly, we're at a point where we need to unify and not lose the gains we've already made (in minority civil rights)."

Another UNC medical student, Mark Smith, said he was at the Nov. 11 demonstration to show his opposition to the murders of five anti-Klan protesters in Greensboro Nov. 3.

"The version released by the police was not true," Smith said. "A copy of the special permit was given to the Klan, and the cops were sitting around the corner while people were getting killed. Then they started arresting the wounded people for inciting a riot."

Larimar seeks judgeship

William Larimar, a Carrboro resident who practices law in Chapel Hill, announced Thursday that he is seeking the Democratic nomination to the local district court.

Larimar is challenging Stanley Peele of Chapel Hill for a district judgeship for the 15-B judicial district serving Orange and Chatham counties. Peele filed for reelection Jan. 9. Donald Lee Paschal of Siler City is the other

Guilty plea for kidnap

A Chapel Hill man received a nine-20 year sentence Wednesday after he pleaded guilty to charges of kidnapping a UNC senior Sept. 8.

Curtis Parrish, 24, of E-4 Ridgefield in Chapel Hill pleaded guilty to kidnapping, common law robbery and larceny of a motor vehicle in the Sept. 8 abduction of Chris Mackie of Carrboro. The kidnapping charge carries a sentence of five-10 years and the robbery and larceny charges each carry two-five year sentences.

Parrish is the last of three Chapel Hill persons to be convicted this month in connection with the incident. Brenda McCrae, 21, of Pritchard Street Extension and Kenneth Watson, 15, of 601-B Gommans St. received 20- and 15-year sentences, respectively. All of the charges were consolidated by District Judge Coy E. Brewer Jr.
