Record-setting Bernie McGlade ready for ECU

By MARJO RANKIN
Staff Writer

When Bernadette McGlade came to Chapel Hill in the fall of 1976, she had no idea she would leave UNC with scoring and rebounding records four years later.

Her 1,128 career rebounds far surpass the school record held by Billy Cunningham until a few weeks ago. And her 1,422 career points takes the record Cathy Shoemaker set for women's basketball in 1979.

McGlade will put her talents on the line today when the UNC women's basketball team plays East Carolina in an afternoon contest at Carmichael Auditorium.

The 2 p.m. tip-off time was unavoidable because of tonight's wrestling match in Carmichael. The Pirate game is crucial to Carolina's standing going into the state tournament Feb. 21-23.

"This game counts as our divisional game for seeding purposes in the state tournament," UNC women's basketball coach Jennifer Alley said. "The game we played at Appalachian State counted for divisional standing and we won that. One of the games we played with N.C. State counted and we lost that. So we're 1-1."

Carolina's 1-1 divisional record is important because it is identical to East Carolina's, and the teams are tied for second place, behind N.C. State.

The Pirates are comparable in size to the Tar Heels and have some potent scorers, especially on the front line. Forward Rosie Thompson, 5-foot-9, leads the state in scoring, averaging nearly 20 points. Junior transfer Kathy Riley has also contributed heavily to the Pirate offense. The 5-9 Riley scored 32 points in ECU's 71-68 win over Carolina on Jan. 16.

Center Marcia Girven, and guards Lydia Roundtree and Laurie Sikes complete the Pirate starting lineup.

Both McGlade and Alley said Carolina will have to curb Riley's scoring habit but not at the expense of ignoring the rest of the ECU offense.

"I think we're going to have to play her a little tighter," McGlade said of Riley, "but we can't really ignore the other players on their team."

That may be the mistake ECU made in its first meeting with the Pirates as it held Thompson to six points, but Riley compensated with 32.

"We weren't prepared for her shooting at the range she shot," Alley said. She said Riley had previously confined her shots to within 10 feet of the basket. "Over there (Greenville) she shot from the wing 20-to-25 feet out."

Alley also said Sikes would provide more offense than she did in the January game.

"Laurie has gotten into the offense for them," she said. "She's been averaging 16-to-18 points each game (lately) and is more of an offensive threat than she was against us."

After dropping two straight, McGlade said this game will be important mentally for the Tar Heels, who are now 15-9.

"We're really going to have to be intense," the 6-1 Tar Heel captain said. "It's an important divisional game, but even more than that, it's real important for us as a team to get together and put a win back on our record. We need a win now to turn it around."

McGlade, more than any other Tar Heel, should know about turning things around. As UNC's first major recruit, the Gloucester, N.J., resident has seen a lot of ups and downs in women's basketball. She has started every game during her four seasons and has rewritten the record books.

Along with her career scoring and rebounding records, she holds individual game honors for most points (29), most rebounds (22) and most field goals (14). For season records, she's got the most points (470), most free throws (80), most rebounds (318), best scoring average (14.7) and best rebounding average (12.4). And to that the career scoring and rebounding averages, and it's clear that McGlade's four years have been busy ones.

But she probably could challenge the most modest and humble for their records, too.

"When people ask me about the records, I don't get too enthused about them, because when you're in a team sport, as far as I'm concerned, individual records don't really matter that much," McGlade said. "Someone can be setting all the records in the world, but if they're in a team sport, they still want the team to do well."

"And, if the team does well, then that's when they're really a winner," she added. "I would rather not set any records at all and still have a real good team."

As the only senior on a team with six freshmen, McGlade has provided some much-needed leadership.

"I think they've matured a whole lot," she said of the freshmen. "I think they're excellent basketball players with so much talent that's not even funny. The biggest thing they've had to get over this year is their inexperience and that's why we've been a little erratic."

"They have to get the experience themselves and develop a little bit of consistency within their own games. Heck, it's the first time any of them have ever played college ball. They've helped us tremendously, and I can see them getting better and better every day."

McGlade said she has only one regret about that progress.

"We've had a pretty good year even though we've had nine losses. I don't think that's a true indication of what kind of team we are. I think they know that deep down. I think they're going to go places. I'm just sorry I won't be here with them. I'll cheer them on from afar, but it's not the same as being on the team."

More likely than not, that "afar" will be graduate school either here or at Maryland for the physical education major. She said she isn't attracted to the women's professional basketball league.

All that is still somewhere in the future. For now, McGlade will concentrate on beating East Carolina and ultimately adding a state championship to her list of accomplishments.

"As far as I'm concerned the whole season is just a warm-up for the tournaments," she said. "Whether you've won all your season games or you've lost all your season games, what you do in the tournaments is what really counts."

"My goal would be to win the state championship."

A corollary was coined Monday night to the cliché that a book can't be judged by its cover. A group of bookworms in basketball suits can't either.

Certainly it is unfair to suggest that Yale of the Ivy League is considered to be all academics and no athletics.

But before it had pressed North Carolina to the limit before losing 85-74 Monday night in Carmichael Auditorium, many thought the contest might be a ho-hum sleeper for the Heels before they returned to the real world of Atlantic Coast Conference basketball.

Give those observers an A for thinking and award Yale an A for effort and a B for ability. It wasn't bad at all and still has a 10-6 record with the loss.

"They were a pretty good team," said Tar Heel Mike O'Koren, who led UNC scorers with 20 points. "You look at them and say they can't hurt, but they were good. It's an old saying that you can't judge a book by its cover."

Or a group of supposed bookworms, who gave the Tar Heels all they wanted before the true difference in talent showed late in the game.

"Yale almost had eight straight wins," said Carolina coach Dean Smith, who had to manipulate his bench to compensate for three seniors missing from his lineup. "We should have taken care of them (in the first half). When our guys had to have it, they had it."

The Tar Heels entered the game without Rich Yonakor, who had developed a case of strep throat and did not suit up. They got only five minutes of playing time from guard Dave Colescott, who continues to have a sore right knee, and got just 10 minutes from John Virgil, who left the contest at 6:07 of the first half.

Virgil sustained a bruised back when he was fouled by Yale's Steve Leondis on an alley-opp attempt and came down hard, grimacing in pain and scaring the 10,000 fans in attendance. The 6-foot-6 senior walked off the court after a few minutes on the floor.

With the three players out of action, Carolina relied on center Jeff Wolf and guard Mike Pepper for support.

While O'Koren paced the way and Al Wolf turned in a 16-point performance, Wolf and Pepper both scored their career highs with 12 points each. Wolf dominated the boards with 15 rebounds against the smaller Elis.

"I just wanted to go out and play well," Wolf said. "We needed help on the boards with Rich out."

For Pepper, his 28 minutes on the floor were an example of his continued involvement in the Tar Heel game plan.

"We knew John and Dave wouldn't be back in the second half, and I knew I'd have to do the best I could," Pepper said. "Their absence was definitely felt at times."

UNC led 46-34 at halftime and never trailed, but saw its lead dwindle to four—44-60 with 6:24 left in the game—after Yale scored six straight points.

A minute later, Eli Joe Jolson had an opportunity to close the lead to two on the free-throw line but missed both, and the Tar Heels went back up by eight on long jumpers from Pepper and O'Koren.

Frank Maturo was largely responsible for keeping Yale within striking distance throughout as he scored 22 points, most of them on long jump shots.

"Believe it or not, that's where I usually shoot from," Maturo said. "They'll give me the first couple of shots to make me prove myself. If I'm hitting, they'll shade to that side. Then I'll move to the other side."

The victory ended a series of non-conference games for 16-4 North Carolina, which travels to Maryland on Thursday. "We had a pretty tough road out of the conference, but we're getting down to the nitty-gritty," O'Koren said.

Smith said Colescott and Virgil would likely play at Maryland and said he hoped Yonakor would be ready as well.
