

But no bye

A title for Terps?

The irony of it all. Not that there's any reason Maryland shouldn't win the Atlantic Coast Conference championship, but the fact that the Terrapins are choosing 1980 as the year to take all comers during the regular season is interesting for one big reason.

Bill Fields

1980 is also the year Georgia Tech decided it wanted a baptism into the ACC. The Yellow Jackets' entry gave the conference eight teams, not seven, as was the case before. South Carolina withdrew from the ACC after the 1971 season.

The Gamecocks' absence made the conference's post-season tournament—which determines the real ACC champion—be fought between seven teams, not eight. With seven teams one school earned the right to watch the first-day games.

That team was the regular season champ, and that winner's gift was a bye. Lefty Driesell can thank Georgia Tech for the un-present he might receive later this month.

At 8-1, Maryland has a two-game lead over 6-3 North Carolina. The Tar Heels meet the Terrapins at 9 tonight in a televised game at College Park, Md., a locale where Driesell currently is being loved more than ever.

For the Terps to not win the ACC regular season and not receive the un-bye, they'll have to lose to the Tar Heels and then to Clemson on Saturday and Virginia on Feb. 23.

And the way Maryland has played so far this season, the chances of three losses are not good. The Terrapins are an excellent—and changed—organization.

Driesell is still coaching, still screaming and still exulting the Terrapin faithful when Maryland does something right.

This season, with a bunch of players who are not getting anxious, who are not letting bad shots fly and who are playing like a team, the seventh-ranked Terps look like they can beat anyone.

Mike O'Koren thinks so. He remembers all too well the 92-86 defeat handed the Tar Heels by the Terps in January. For O'Koren, the reason for Maryland's 16-3 record is easy to pinpoint.

"Albert King is playing well, Ernest Graham and Buck Williams are rebounding well, and Greg Manning is shooting well."

In detail, that might be it. In general, one word will suffice: T-e-a-m.

The Terps are playing like one. Albert King, who was supposed to play like he is now when he arrived in College Park three years ago, is the team leader with a 21-point average.

But King is not the only reason for Maryland's success. Ernest Graham has learned that the sport is more than 25-foot jump shots. He can still shoot—he has a 17.5 average—but has improved other facets of his game.

Buck Williams, the Terps' 6-foot-8 center, averages nine rebounds and 14 points a game and has handled the pivot well when Driesell failed to sign a tall recruit.

The sum of the parts is the ACC's top team so far, and UNC will have to be at the top of its game to win on Maryland's home floor.

Driesell, long considered a great recruiter, is proving himself a great coach this year. Even the un-bye can't tarnish that.

Albert King leads the Terps with a 21.2 point average

New UNC club is already making a large 'racquet'

Most seniors would like to graduate, make a small fortune, party, and leave something to the University—and not necessarily in that order.

Unfortunately, the obvious choices for sports-minded alumni gifts have been taken; UNC already has Kenan Stadium and Carmichael Auditorium.

IMs & Clubs

By CHIP KARNES

But senior David Weiss has found the alternative. He is both founder and president of the UNC Racquetball Club. And surprisingly, Weiss' contribution was not that difficult.

"Before we had our first meeting Jan. 22," he said, "all I did was put an ad in The Daily Tar Heel, and put out a few fliers."

Interest was so great that the introductory meeting had to be moved from South Gallery of the Carolina Union to Great Hall in order to accommodate the more than 50 new members.

"We have a wide range of experience in the club," Weiss said. "There were some who had never played before, but we also have some of the best players in the state."

At first glance, racquetball is comparable to a game of tennis in an over-sized phone booth with frying pans. Although the sport is not new, its popularity has boomed enough to make racquetball the fastest growing recreational activity in the United States.

Although there are no professional leagues, several top players already make their livings off lessons and endorsements. The number of racquetball courts has more than quadrupled in the last five years.

"In tennis, if you're just starting out, most of the time is spent just chasing balls," Weiss said. "In racquetball, anybody can go down and play well on the first time out. Nearly two-thirds of the club members are girls."

Currently, a portion of the club plays in the courts reserved in Woolen Gym, while the rest travel to the Carolina Courts in Raleigh. The group hopes to travel soon in University-owned vans.

"After the new women's gym is completed, and depending on how interest grows, we might not have to travel as much," Weiss said. Upon completion, Fetzner Gymnasium will offer the University 10-12 additional courts.

How long until racquetball becomes an intercollegiate sport? "There's already a number of colleges playing between each other," Weiss said. "Also, a conference in the southeastern states is already in the planning stages." Tournaments abound too, and Weiss has been to 12 in only three years.

"We hope to set up a challenge ladder so that the club can compete within itself," Weiss said. Although all tournaments are open, "when one comes up, the treasury will help pay registration for out top people to play," he added.

The next meeting of the three-week-old club will be announced next week in the DTH classifieds.

IM NOTES: The Intramural Office said teams that want to play IM softball this spring, must attend one of three orientation meetings to be held Feb. 26, 27 and 28 in Woolen Gym...

The newly elected president of the UNC Sports Club Council is Chuck Gardiner...

The UNC Ice Hockey team meets UNC-Greensboro at 8:45 tonight at the Daniel Boone Rink in Hillsborough. At 6:30 Duke plays N.C. State.
